Opening speech

Good morning, members of the honorable presiding board, delegates, and the entire diplomatic corps present here; please accept warm greetings from Representative Emmanuel Macron.

Today, critical minerals and strategic maritime routes have become instruments of geopolitical power. Despite international mechanisms designed to regulate them, we continue to see situations where economic interests are prioritized over the development of the countries supplying these resources; yet, focusing solely on the economic aspect renders us indifferent to the problems stemming from an economy dependent on a single nation. All too often, the wealth generated by these resources leaves the country of origin, while local communities receive only a fraction of the value created and remain in poverty.

France believes this must change. Resource-rich nations should have the capacity to process their own resources, develop industries, and benefit directly from their participation in international relations.

At the same time, no state should use control over critical resources or maritime routes as a tool for coercion; why must we be so self-interested? According to the United Nations, more than 80% of the volume of world trade in goods is transported by sea. France advocates for greater cooperation among nations, the diversification of suppliers, equity, and the guarantee of fair returns for all those countries that, for years, have been used merely for the profit of other nations.

It is not a matter of replacing one form of dependency with another. We must build partnerships based on sovereignty, respect, mutual economic prosperity, and responsibility. Thank you.
