

Chariot of Vix

(from "The Milenian Scepter")

Vix is the mortal daughter of the Immortal Zargos (alias Nyx, see Wrath of the Immortals). She is a powerful warrior and favored by Zargos, who has indirectly given her several magical items, including the chariot of Vix.

The origin of the chariot remains a mystery. Some scholars believe it was created by Zargos while he was still a mortal sorcerer many circles (years) past. Others claim it was stolen from Ixion, Immortal Patron of the Sun, and was once pulled by his fiery steeds.

The chariot is constructed with a wooden frame covered with bronze plates, which are in turn overlaid with designs in silver and gold. Wicked blades of blackest obsidian extend from its hubs, sticking out perpendicularly from the wheels. The chariot can carry two human-sized passengers. While a beast is hitched to the chariot, the creature receives the benefit of a haste spell, doubling its normal movement rate. However, the beast cannot make twice the normal number of attacks; it can only move twice as fast. If the beast has the ability to fly, it can still fly while pulling the chariot. This is because the chariot has the power to levitate, making it virtually weightless.
