Queries

- Is it ethical to train an AI on copyrighted creative work, without permission or attribution?
- Is it ethical to allow people to generate new work in the styles of artists and writers without compensating them?
  - Is it ethical to charge money for that service, built on the work of others?
- How will society cope with the fact that posting a single photo/clip of yourself online allows your entire likeness to be mimicked by AI?

2. Bias & Bigotry

Queries

- Generative AI systems are western- and English-centric. They regularly reproduce racism, sexism, and bigotry. Since LLMs exacerbate inequality, do we have a moral duty to reject this new tech?
- Much like with hallucination issues, issues of racism, misogyny, bigotry can’t be solved. Nevertheless, organizations, businesses, and governments are using AI. How should we regulate these systems so that we mitigate the harms?

3. Ethics

Queries

- How do we acknowledge the work of these “clickworkers” (as they are often called), when we use generative AI applications?
- Generative AI apps use our inputs to help train their outputs. Is this ethical?

4. Misinformation

Resources

- Generative AI applications often output misinformation.

Queries

- What do we do when AI "hallucinations" have real world consequences?
  - In the article above, an AI application labeled a Dutch politician a "terrorist." Presumably this could happen to people without them even knowing that the AI did this. What recourse should this politician have?
- What happens when the stream of misinformation and disinformation is nearly constant thanks to the ease of creation afforded by generative AI?
  - To what extent will this change how we think about media we encounter online? Do we need more media literacy instruction in schools to help? What about citizens who are not in school?

Queries

- How will AI change how we work? Will our work output become more like generative AI outputs?
- How will work, jobs and productivity change in an age of high AI use?

Extra Queries

Equity

Will all students having access to Generative AI level the playing field (e.g tutors and parents make less of an impact when everyone has an AI)? Or will privileged students have access to human tutors while less privileged students have to use AI models?

Given some teachers are using and teaching students about AI and some aren’t, how will this change our students’ AI literacy and AI-enhanced skill development depending on which teachers they get in the registration process?

Citizenship

By uncritically adopting a new technology, are we graduating a generation of tech-solutionists or tech-utopians that believe technology is neutral, inevitable and good?

Mental Health

The last round of disruptive technology (social media) has (net) been bad for the health and humanity of our students. Well-founded research has shown an increase in loneliness in our students. It seems likely Generative AI will amplify these issues. How do we ensure this time it's different?

Students will have an endless stream of personalized content created by humans & AI and delivered by AI algorithms. What media literacy instruction do we need to add to our curriculum? Presumably, students will rely on and trust AI for schoolwork, what happens when they start using it for their social lives as well (creating deepfakes of their friends—or teachers!) but also discussing with AI sensitive issues usually reserved for counselors, doctors, and parents.
