What's Working? Support and Extension

Support (for those who need more time, practice, and/or clarification)
I leave my Google Hangout Chat (not a video call) open during that day. Kids can type in a question and get help any time I am online.	Jed Rhees
Hold a Google Hangout at a set time each day or each week when students can get help and ask questions.
Send an email to parents asking for feedback on how things are going and what you can do to support them. Checking in on parents is important too. This is new for them, and they may need support.	Christy Wagner
Create a shared google Q &amp; A doc for students and parents to ask questions. If one person is asking a question there are probably others with the same question. Make sure the doc sharing is set for anyone with the link can edit. Respond in a different color.	Christy Wagner

Extending Learning
Some parents want to do a lot and are happy that we are sending several things. Others feel overwhelmed and think it's too much. It's hard to balance the needs of families, but I think providing options and letting parents know that the assignments are "priority" and which assignments are "extensions" is a big help. Bucket List! In our Welcome section we are challenging students to complete a 3rd Grade BUCKET LIST	Tricia Neilson
Record you reading the book How Full is Your Bucket? For Kids in WeVideo. Assign a Question in Google Classroom. What did you do to fill someone's bucket (in your family) today? Create a topic called Character Education.	Gina Buckway

My daughter's teacher had the kids post a video on google classroom of them giving instructions for cooking something. She has called it "The Cooking Show". It was fun to see each of their videos posted. (courtesy of Lisa Parker) Kyler Makes A Quesadilla (Spanish) Bella Makes Homemade Popcorn (English - my 7th grade son had fun editing it.)	Jen Ferry
I created a "teach the teacher" assignment where students make a google slides presentation to teach me something. Can be a simple slide show or they can add in video, etc	Kathy Ulrich
PE with Joe- online workouts for students and teachers
Cincinnati Zoo live on Facebook every day
@wendymac art lessons live on Instagram each day at 11:00 am
Put Readers' Theater scripts on your google classroom for families to read together. Some books and resources have leveled reading parts.	Terie Maxfield
