On Another's Sorrow by William Blake

1. What is Blake's main point in this poem? In the works of which writer of two hundred years before does this point appear ?

2. How does this poem indicate that Blake regards animals as opposed to humans?

3. How does this poem indicate Blake's view of God? What do this and previous poems indicate as central to Blake's view of God, and what does this indicate about his view of religion?

4. What connection does Blake probably make between his religious and political views based on the Songs of Innocence you have read so far?
