s2.7 - 2nd floor bath floor - Subfloor Deficiency

The second floor bathroom floor had new vinul in it at the time of purchase. It seemed to be structurally okay although no detailed inspection was done. After moving in and verifying numerous concealment issues, we started reading over the quotes again and found a confusing reference to a bouncing floor in the bathroom that was initially a concern but then deemed a lesser concern.

We removed the vinyl and found a new layer fo 1/4 luan. We removed that and discovered a severely compromised subfloor right around the tub and between the tube and toilet. The new layer of luan had masked the problem, not remedied it.

The contractor's original quote to replace the subfloor was the proper thing to do. The Contractor and Seller's Agent seemingly figured out they could do lesser work and mask the defect, so they took that route. The contractor noted the Seller of the change in work, but he did not lower the price of the job, which was significantly less given the change of scope.

We ended up having to tear up the new work to look for damage and then we had to replace a portion of the subfloor which was damaged which was about 16" by 60".

Subject: Additional work estimates

Hi N

Here are a few more estimates to keep things moving forward while I'm waiting for the cost of deck materials to rebuild outside master bedroom deck and remove North side deck. Below are combined ideas from both me and that will make the home more presentable. There are no casings (window trim) on living room windows and one upstairs closet. Provide and Install: $150.

No baseboards in downstairs bath or laundry. Provide and install: $170.

Smoke detectors (every bedroom and top of stairs) and carbon monoxide detectors on each floor are mandatory. Provide and install: $250.

Repair the hole in the ceiling in the master closet $95.

Reverse the swing on downstairs bath door, to open into hallway. (New toilets will not clear.) $140

Upstairs hall bath floor repair: Rend will send you a video showing movement in the floor. I won't know what the damage is until I remove the vinyl and take a look. But I'm estimating about $400 labor to repair and then the cost of new vinyl, installed, at about $375.

Remove shed attached to pool house: (I will need to include the rental of a large dumpster for debris removal @ cost of $675) total cost with dumpster and labor $2500.

Paint inside of front door, (Prime and two coats paint) labor and materials $275.

Particle of the garage-walls and ceiling-leave cabinets as-is.

New counter tops in kitchen, Formica (or equivalent) a new version of what is there now, $3900. I remove the old, a specialty contractor installs the new, then I reinstall sink, etc. Hopefully I'll have all deck numbers by tomorrow, I'm waiting on my lumberman to price out my materials list.

Sincerely, Jahn Chatter, GC #3947

Update from General Contractor to Seller on Scope of Work

pologies for being quiet too long: last week we had major septic/sewer issues at our home and I lost a couple days work, got a bit overwhelmed, but I k on track as of today, all good at home now. I have the entire week to devote to your property with my goal being to get as much done as I can by Saturday; caught up with current work orders. Here are some updates and new estimates.

The upstairs bath floor was wet only on the top underpayment layer (removed) and the structural subfloor is OK- good news. I'll be installing new plywood underlayment today and new vinyl will be installed before the week is over. We will be very close to estimated cost.

HIs belief about the scope of work changed dramatically but the cost to repair was going to be the same?

The Seller admits to a Bathtub that overflowed regularly

Plumbing bust and repair - There was a plumbing bust In ceiling area above first floor bathroom and laundry? Can we get a bit of info on that (no receipt or documentation)

There wasn't a busted plumbing there it was an overflowing bathtub. I have a daughter who believed she was a fish. We did have the drain fixed a number of times, and my understanding is that there was a leak in the plumbing drain of one of the sinks, in the upstairs bathroom recently

The Seller's agent had verbally revealed the fact there was some kind of major water event in the walls or ceiling in the first floor bath and utility area when discussing a different topic.

When we asked about that, the Seller provided a response that was fully off target. In fact, as we discovered after we removed the drywall on the first floor, there was one or several water leaks that contributed to that first floor matter that were well away from being bellow this tub.

Instead of providing a straight forward answer to the question asked, the Seller diverted attention a different direction.

The seller told us about a problem with a daughter who overflowed the bath tub regularly.

That most likely explains the wet floor referenced by the contractor as well as some of the water damage and dry rot found in the 2nd floor bathroom floor that was a problem.

NOTE: The contractor was in there 2-3 months after the family had departed, and according to his scope update, that floor was still wet...

The subfloor by the tub was structurally unsound

When we focused on areas around the tube, we found significant soft spots in the floor. .

We pulled up the vinyl and found new, 1/4 luan that he referenced as "plywood". It had been overlaid over the original sub floor. The subfloor all around the tub needed to be removed due to damage. This subfloor damage would have been visible to the contractor before he installed the 1/4" overlay.

July 6, 2021 - this shows the part that had to be cut out...

Here's the board that was cut out next to the repair. The contractor would have been looking directly at the compromised board in that condition when he overlaid it.

It was a 3/4 ply subfloor and in some areas 50% of the material was gone. This should not have been overlaid. It should have been cut out and repaired. This photo was taken from below. The hole in the left bay is tub drain. The duct between the two red circles is the same bay that was removed in the photos above. That piece of 2x4 with mold on it should have been new in the October or November time frame and it accumulated that much mold between then and march. Presumably from other leaks in teh bathroom plumbing that were not remedied when the contracting work started.

TDS page 2 - Seller Negligence / Fraud / Conspiracy

B) Seller omits to reference damaged subfloor that had been covered up with luan.. In fairness, if we are to believe the written documentation provided, he was misled, although sharing the fact the daughter regularly allowed the tub to overflow is a material fact that was omitted.
