

QUOTE:

When Kerry Dirk said, "I imagine that you would probably not share a risqué joke with your mom, send a "Hey Buddy" email to your professor, or update your Facebook status as 'X has a huge wart on his foot.'" I very much agree with his views. Because I think when you show your audience what you have written, you are like speaking to the audience. I have sent emails to many people. When I contact the school and the professors, I will finish it like formal writing. I will use a more relaxed and funny way to contact my friends, because I don't have to worry about my friends' reaction after seeing my writing style.

When Kerry Dirk said, "In fact, the headlines are so important to the success of the newspaper that they are tested on volunteers to see the readers' immediate responses." This is true and interesting headlines will always attract readers' attention and arouse their curiosity in the first place. Many people now watch the news on the Internet, including me. I usually don't take the initiative to watch the news, but when I see some news with interesting headlines, I will unknowingly be attracted and click into it.

Texting Close Friends

Send text messages to close friends, this is what I often do. When I send text messages to close friends, I will use my easiest way to talk to them, without feeling pressure. We all make jokes to each other. We will use memes to express our feelings. And sometimes using memes can properly adjust the atmosphere. For example, when you feel that your feeling cannot be expressed in words, you can use memes to express your feeling. Memes are a good thing. But some memes have a double meaning, so be careful when using them. And I found that when texting with close friends, the text messages are not too long. For example, when we are talking about a large amount of information, our thoughts will not be typed in one text message at once and sent out, but divided into several text messages. Sending a long text message at a time will extend your typing time, so we are generally not done. If we find interesting things, news or videos, we will share them with each other.

And we have never tried to send a lot of bombardment messages all at once, and my close friends and I never have not done this. Because this makes us feel irritable. A friend of mine once sent 99+ identical text messages in a chat group, which made me feel uncomfortable.