

Wild Thirsty Glitter Man Found

This morning, many individuals spent their time huddled in very bright garlic-filled bunkers, as they thought that a vampire had been seen in the area. Instead, a thirsty glitter man had been sighted just outside the ELA classroom. His appearance caused great amazement from the Twilight book club, as they believed that he was Edward the thirsty glittering vampire. Unfortunately for them, but fortunately for anyone who preferred to keep their measly five liters of blood, the man was not a vampire. Instead, he was simply a man wearing a strangely glittery outfit who had a hankering for pomegranate juice. His method of choice for drinking this pomegranate juice was through a very much dead human carcass, and people who saw him drinking out of its ripped-open neck thought that he was a vampire sucking someone's blood. As it turns out, the thirsty glitter man was at one point a Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtle who lived in a sewer, but due to a recent mishap in the music classroom, the sewer that he lived in was filled with glitter, and he was forced to leave. As of the current date, (June 37th, 1952), the thirsty glitter man has not been captured by the authorities, and continues to run freely through the streets, filling carcasses with pomegranate juice.

Republishing: Ask Cat-Elizabeth

Get all the hottest goss from your favorite middle-aged teen, Cat-Elizabeth the Seventeenth! Ask her all your juicy questions about boys, girls, and any other entities!

Cat-Elizabeth does not discriminate! All questions emailed to chloe.case@waterfordmontessori.org will be featured in a future issue of The Tringle Gazelle.

Cat-Elizabeth is waiting.