Vinloo Privacy Policy

Effective Date: September 15, 2026

Vinloo is a lightweight vinyl record collection tool designed to help users organize, archive, and review their personal record collections. We believe a collection app should remain simple and should not require users to provide unnecessary personal information. This Privacy Policy explains what information Vinloo uses, why it is needed, how it is protected, and what happens when a user ends their use of the service.

1. Information We Use

Vinloo does not require users to provide names, email addresses, phone numbers, birthdays, profile information, photographs of themselves, contacts, or other personal profile information.

To provide account access and basic service verification, Vinloo may use a device-specific identifier or equivalent unique device identifier. This identifier is used solely to recognize the authorized device and support the login and access process.

The device identifier is not used to build a personal profile, deliver targeted advertising, identify the real-world identity of a user, or collect unrelated personal information.

2. Collection Records

Vinloo may store information that users intentionally create within the app, such as vinyl collection records, album names, artists, release years, genres, labels, editions, condition notes, purchase dates, purchase prices, purchase locations, personal notes, shelf arrangements, and wishlist entries.

This information exists to provide the collection-management features selected by the user. Vinloo does not require users to attach their real identity to these records.

3. Purpose of Device Identification

The device identifier has a limited technical purpose.

It may be used to:

- Verify access to the service

- Recognize an authorized device
- Maintain the basic login state
- Associate app data with the appropriate device

Vinloo does not use the identifier for behavioral profiling or unrelated tracking.

The identifier will not be intentionally used for purposes beyond account verification and service operation unless the applicable service model changes and appropriate notice is provided.

4. Storage and Security

Information handled by Vinloo is protected using reasonable technical and organizational safeguards.

Device identifiers and associated service data are stored using secured storage mechanisms and are protected against unauthorized access through appropriate access controls and encryption measures where applicable.

Vinloo limits access to service data to what is reasonably necessary for operation, maintenance, security, and support.

No security method can guarantee absolute protection. However, Vinloo takes reasonable measures to reduce the risk of unauthorized access, alteration, disclosure, or loss.

5. No Sale of Personal Information

Vinloo does not sell or rent user information.

Because Vinloo does not require users to submit conventional personal profile information, the service is intentionally designed to minimize personally identifiable data.

Vinloo may use technical service providers when necessary to operate infrastructure or maintain essential functionality. Such providers are expected to process information only for authorized service purposes and to maintain appropriate security safeguards.

6. User-Controlled Collection Data

Users are responsible for the information they choose to enter into their vinyl records.

Users should avoid placing sensitive personal information into optional note fields, purchase records, or other free-text areas.

Vinloo does not require personal information to create or maintain a vinyl collection.

7. Account Cancellation and Device Identifier Removal

Users may request cancellation of their Vinloo account at any time.

When an account is cancelled, the device identifier associated with that account will be removed from the applicable account records in accordance with the service's deletion procedures.

After cancellation, the device will no longer be recognized as the previous account for login purposes. If the user accesses Vinloo again and a new account is created, the device will be treated as a new user environment.

Certain limited information may be retained when reasonably necessary to comply with legal obligations, resolve disputes, prevent abuse, or maintain security.

8. Children's Use

Vinloo is a general-purpose collection utility. It does not intentionally request personal information from children. If information is provided in a manner that violates applicable law, appropriate steps may be taken to address the situation.

9. Changes to This Policy

Vinloo may update this Privacy Policy when its services, technology, or legal requirements change. The latest version will contain a revised effective date.

Continued use of Vinloo after an updated policy becomes effective indicates acceptance of the revised policy where such acceptance is legally required.
