

Creating Chimeras

If a book has footnotes, though it's fiction,
How do you classify it?
Science fiction has made some inroads
To this chimera crossroads
But afaik, historical fiction
Coincidentally, is behind the times

I've kept writing vigils like Virgil.

I muse 'neath the ste-lar stars at night, I sure hope you do, too.

Perhaps a mix, writing while wondering under stars is next on my list To Do

I don't mean to be egotistical

but I hope to revolu-tion-ize literature fic-tion-al

A melding of deep research and deep imagination is my objective.

Thank you for being part of this volu-ntary experiment. Collective.

To cross bloodlines of logic and creative

Though she personally likes them, this avocational teacher thinks

For students, textbooks and research papers can be dusty and dry

Entertainment is currently a current vapid like air

But a combined concoction of rippling vibrant characters could add life and water

Add fuel to the fire

Of curiosity

I've heard people say 'no man is an island'

and 'standing on the shoulders of giants.'

Reading and citing giants' thoughts are excellent.

You'll tower among the peaks

And enjoy their "views."

But you can create even small things

with your equals, also.

Long distances of space and time are fine.

Someone who is dead- a slight seance

or someone on the other side of a screen.

But you can turn to the person next to you, also.

The "joyful burden" of creating does not solely fall on your shoulders.

If each "man is a universe unto himself," two universes combining- how much larger are the infinities?

Yet, most books have but a single author. I mourn for all the lost possibilities.

Yet, most celebrities' songs are sing-ular singing.

Yammering on with their plastic faces and artificial flavor voice sounds

While Youtube's aquifers are overflowing with good pipes to water the ground

While someone in your own class, city's written more profound

While many right in reach could outsing them, hands down

Spawn beautiful ideas and solutions and skills and combinations of knowledge and rhyme.

Ideas spawn other ideas, ad infinitum down the line.

Chimeral kaleidoscopic chords.
