Presenting and Revising and Submitting Your Work

The assignments:

- Help you experience learning in new and different ways (e.g., experiencing games, discussing games, doing analysis projects, participating, reflecting)
- Push you to do more than you were able to before

In order to help you get the most out of these assignments, you need to have the right attitude:

- Wanting to grow (assignments can always be improved upon)
- Wanting to submit your best work (I want you to revise your work before handing it in)
- Appreciating the ideas of others
- Wanting to help others grow
- Austin's Butterfly: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=hqh1MRWZjms>

Steps for presenting and submitting work

Before

1. Look over your work (on paper / a digital document)
2. Highlight your main ideas.

During

3. Share your work and focus on the main ideas.
  - a. Options: Hang up papers / Present google document / round robin mixer / ...
4. Audience: take notes, listen carefully

After:

5. Audience: give comments: write a question/comment on a post it (and sign your name) and stick it to the work / give it to the speaker.
6. Presenter: Think about the comments. Make a short presentation about how you will answer the questions and comments.

Then:

7. Before handing in your work (you may take another week or two to complete your work):
  - a. Revise your work. Improve your ideas. Polish your product.
  - b. Consider the audience's comments (#5) carefully. Include your responses (in #6) in your revised work.
  - c. Interrogate your own work. Ask yourself "Why?" "How?" "What?" to deepen your ideas and work.
  - d. Complete a reflective diary.

Finally:

8. Hand in your work:
  - a. Your revised project work
  - b. Your reflective diary

| 1. What do you think you did well on your first draft of your work? And, what did you have trouble with?                                                                                                                               |                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| 2. When you presented your work, what were the most useful questions and comments from other students and the teacher? List each one on a different line below. Next to the comment, provide students names, e.g., xxxxxx (Hina/Taro). | 3. How did you specifically address those questions and comments? How did you improve your work? Write your response/notes next to the original comments and questions from other students. |
