Looking Ahead

Read the following real life story about a domestic worker in Brazil. Then, talk to a classmate about it and answer the questions below.

Creuza Oliveira, a domestic worker in Brazil

The voice of Creuza Oliveira tells the story of more than nine million Brazilian domestic workers, mostly women, mostly black, for whom slavery is not relegated to the dust piles of history. (...)

Born in a family of poor rural workers with no schooling, Oliveira began life as a domestic worker in Bahia when she was 10 years old. Unable to balance work and school, she had to pick work and dropped out of school numerous times. (...)

"Almost half a million domestic workers in Brazil are children and teenagers between 5 and 17 years of age – working without compensation, as slaves," she said. (...)

Oliveira is now President of the National Federation of Domestic Workers in Brazil and active in the Unified Black Movement and the Women's Movement. (...)

Creuza Maria de Oliveira was employed as a domestic worker at the age of 10. She speaks out on the rights of domestic workers.

- What was Creuza Maria's job? What does she do today?
- Who does Creuza try to help?
- What does she fight against?
- According to Creuza, is slavery over in our country? Why (not)?

Think about it!

Escravidão e racismo fazem parte da nossa história e não podem ser ignorados. Na sua opinião, é importante que os jovens conheçam o que aconteceu com seus ancestrais? Em pequenos grupos, discuta o lugar da história em nossas vidas.
