Non-Native Letters

J	/'jo.ta/	/tʃ/, /dʒ/, /ʒ/, /j/*
K	/'ka.pa/	/k/*
V	/'ve.ta/	/f/, /v/*
W	/'do.pla 've.ta	/w/, /v/*

*Non-native letters J, K, V, and W, may have different pronunciations depending on the foreign word borrowed. However, often Caerese will change the word to a more native-friendly format, such as Uágincton /'wa.fín(k).tɔn/ from Washington and Iohanesburghe /jø.an.es.'bur.ge/ from Johannesburg.

Acutes and Graves

À Acute accents serve as markers of stress in irregularly-stressed words.

À Grave accents have a variety of uses:

- Homophones: te vs. tè, ango vs. angò
- Marking irregular cases in certain words: e.g. demò (nom.), demum (acc.), demo (dat./gen.), demò (prp.)
- Marking certain words ending in an s, placing the stress on the final syllable: cirès, comunís, uentòs, uirùs

Stress Pattern

Verbs are stressed depending on which principal part the conjugation belongs to. There are three principal parts: the infinitive, past participle, and the first person singular indicative.

- The infinitive, the future tense, and the conditional are all stressed where the infinitive's final syllable is: basiar, basiare, basiarain, etc.
- The past participle and the present participle are stressed (and declined) just as nouns and adjectives are: basiatu, basiante, basiatames, etc.
- All other conjugations are stressed on the second-to-last syllable of the first person singular indicative: basio, basiaia, basieze, etc.

Nouns, adjectives, and all other parts of speech except for verbs stress on the syllable depending on the final letter of the nominative singular. For words other than nouns and adjectives, they simply stress as if they were a noun in the nominative singular.

- Ending in a, e, i, o, u, or y, the second-to-last syllable is stressed: fihu, iostiza, ape, afirmazuò, etc.
- Ending in b, c, d, f, g, n, p, q, r, t, or x, the final syllable is stressed: relox, dotor, discorazon, amrapil, arisiq, etc.
- Ending in às, ès, ìs, òs, ùs, àm, èm, ìm, òm, or ùm, the final syllable is stressed: hispanès, plobiòs, quantùm, xalòm, etc.

Words with irregular stress mark it with an acute accent: ánima, fútbol, imberá, etc.
