So

奥の院

Oku no In literally means 'Inner Sanctuary' that doesn't really give us a clear clue

other than the fact that it's like a password that leads us to Raifuku's inner sanctuary

(yeah, that sucks. doesn't look mighty special)

Note: Oku ~ heart/interior, no ~ particle for possession, in ~ institution, mansion, school, temple

Thoughts:

Raifuku's questions/temptations/gifts(or bribe) to the individuals seem to be somehow connected to the kanji given to them.

Collectively in one's single group, oku's look like the traits a strong man needs to have, while no's looks like something we all should possess while in's look like something an institution needs -- mostly for sustenance, for longevity.

Taken together, it must be the things Raifuku thinks this 'new world' should have, what he wants to exist in the change, and what he thinks is needed in the continuity of the old founding goals that had been long forgotten.

October 17 updates!

Combined together, メモリし真 basically means ‘true to memory’. However, separating them would give different meanings that are equally relevant to Raifuku’s older conversations with everyone and the stuff he’s doing.

...kind of.

1st barrier

メ (me)

Memory

2nd barrier

も (mo)

Mourning, face/surface

More, further, other, again

When added to questions, it gives out a negative form of the word-- ‘nobody, nothing’

モ (mo)

Model

~they have the same pronunciation, but entirely different meanings

3rd barrier

リ (ri)

Advantage, benefit

reason; principle; logic;

(Buddhist term) general principle (as opposed to individual concrete phenomenon);

(in neo-Confucianism) the underlying principles of the cosmos

4th barrier

し (chi)

At end of term, denotes ‘one of the reasons’

Death, history, corpse, teacher, master, clan, vision, messenger;

Founder of a school of thought counter for long, thin things (i.e. swords)

(Abbreviation) police and judicial chief (Heian and Kamakura periods);

(Buddhist term) klesha (polluting thoughts such as greed, hatred and delusion, which result in suffering)

5th barrier

真 (ma)

genuine, truth

just, right
