

Are There Specific Design Elements In An Irish Bar?

Irish pubs are popular around the world because they create cozy and inviting atmospheres for their patrons. There are several design elements that make a bar an Irish Pub, including dark woodwork, corbels supporting the bar, and Celtic moldings. These design features are unique to this type of establishment and are sure to attract your guests' attention.

Traditionally, Irish pubs were community gathering places and local social clubs. They often featured fireplaces and snugs, as well as a space for live music. Today, Irish pubs are still a cornerstone of the local community and provide a great place to meet friends and family. They also offer a variety of delicious food and drinks.

There are many different types of Irish pubs, ranging from cozy rural ones run by small town landlords to Victorian gin palaces in Dublin. All Irish pubs share some common features, however, such as a dark colored wood bar, snugs, and Celtic designs. Whether you are looking to open a new Irish pub or just want to bring some of the Irish spirit home, these tips can help you achieve your goals.

In the 1990s, McNally founded a pub design and manufacturing company that specialized in making prefabricated Irish bars. He designed and built the interiors of hundreds of pubs, first domestically then for foreign markets. He even stocked the bars with imported flooring, decorative glass, mirrors, ceiling tiles, light fixtures, and furniture. His assiduous export and installation of these Irish bars has continued for 30 years, forming a loose confederation of unrelated establishments around the globe that are recognizable to anyone who knows the country they claim to represent.

While McNally insisted on using materials sourced solely from Ireland, this preference sometimes irked clients, especially those who partnered with him in foreign markets. Nevertheless, he did not abandon his belief in the value of a "tangible sense of authenticity." One example involves a client who ordered a table that was to be fashioned from a barrel.

McNally drew up the blueprints, but the client decided to whittle the barrel himself. When the barrel was delivered to the pub, it did not look exactly like a traditional Irish barrel, but the client felt that it conveyed enough of an authentic appearance to be acceptable.

Lighting is another critical element in an Irish Pub, as it can set the mood for the establishment. It is recommended to use warm toned lighting, as this will enhance the cozy and welcoming atmosphere that the Irish pub is known for. The lighting should be low and dim, so that it does not detract from the overall ambiance of the pub.

Irish bars have a reputation for serving delicious food and drink, and their unique design elements help to make them a popular destination for many people. It is important for restaurants to keep up with their competitors in order to compete in the market, but it is also essential for them to find ways to innovate and stand out from the crowd. Taking inspiration from other bars in your area is an excellent way to do this.
