Upon completing the course, students will be able to:

1. Read/view literature/film texts closely for literal and figurative meaning.
2. Employ creative methods to enhance interpretation.
3. Analyze the ways in which literature/film is intentional and form shapes meaning.
4. Understand literature/film within its historical, social, economic, and political context.
5. Join the scholarly dialogue about literature/film through acknowledging the ideas of others and situating your ideas within that dialogue both orally and in writing
6. Explore the significance of aesthetic reading and writing
7. Understand the work of professionals in literature/film studies and career opportunities related to textual analysis
8. Understand connections among works across historical time periods

Course Requirements:

- Reading and Forum Participation
  - We have a lot of material to cover in just 10 weeks, so your participation and your knowledge of the readings for each week is vital. You will write concise responses to prompts posted on blackboard and brief responses to student postings each week/unit. The number of prompts and responses required will vary across units. These responses will replace classroom discussions and will constitute 40% of your total grade.
- Midterm Essay

- The midterm essay will include literary analysis and synthesis of two primary works from units 1-3 and must include at least one biographical, cultural, and/or critical resource from two of those units. Additional sources are optional. The midterm essay should be 5-10 pages and is worth 30% of your total grade.
- Final Project & Presentation
  - The final project & presentation will include literary analysis and synthesis of two primary works from units 4-5 and must include at least one biographical, cultural, and/or critical resource from those units. Additional sources are optional. The final project should be 4-7 pages and is worth 30% of your total grade.

Grading Policies:

- Forum Discussions: 40%
- Midterm Essay: 30%
- Final Project & Presentation: 30%

Means of Assessment:

Close reading of texts, weekly work in forums, essays employing close reading and interpretation, student online presentations.

Brief Outline of Course:

Regular reading or viewing assignments relevant to the theme, class discussion of the materials, written analyses, and exams.
