

Privacy Policy for Decode

Last updated: November 13, 2025

Decode is a Chrome extension that rewrites selected workplace text into clearer communication adapted for neurodivergent professionals. We take privacy seriously and designed Decode to operate with minimal data collection.

Data We Process

- Selected text: When you actively invoke the extension, the selected text you choose is sent to our language model service solely to generate a clearer version. We do not automatically read or capture the entire page.
- Website context: If required for a better rewrite, we may read surrounding text on the page at the moment of your request. This is used only to improve the rewrite quality.

Data We Do Not Collect

- No personal account creation
- No background tracking of browsing history
- No collection of precise location
- No collection of financial, health, or authentication information

How Data Is Used

- Provide the service: We transmit your selected text to an LLM provider to generate a clearer rewrite. Transmission occurs only when you use the feature.
- Temporary processing: Text is processed in memory and is not stored by us beyond the time required to generate the result. We instruct the LLM provider to disable training on this data where such an option is available.

Sharing

We do not sell or rent your data. We share data only with our LLM provider as a processor for the purpose of providing the rewrite. We do not permit secondary use.

Storage and Retention

Decode does not persist your content on our servers. The extension may use chrome.storage to save local preferences such as tone and reading level. These settings do not contain user content.

Security

Transport is encrypted using HTTPS. We continually review our practices to reduce data exposure.

User Controls

- You choose when to invoke the extension and what text to send.
- You can clear local preferences at any time from the extension settings.

Children

The extension is not intended for children under 13 and does not knowingly collect information from children.
