

Twenty Twenty One Audition Information and Piece

Content warnings: missing/dead persons, swearing, dystopian, threatening letters.

This production includes strong language and discussions of missing or dead persons and threatening letters. It also includes dystopian themes.

4 gender neutral roles

Alex Bradbury. YouTuber and plot protagonist who uncovers truths about government and corporate lies. Screen Time 85% Speaking Time 80%

Spokesperson of a tech company. Powerful and wealthy owner of a technology firm, calculating and clever in their responses, stays away from the public eye. Screen Time 5% Speaking Time 5%

Government Official (Anonymous). High-ranking member of government, spokesperson and chair of technological communication for the UK. Screen Time 5% Speaking Time 5%

News Reporter. Covers breaking news, introduction and concluding scenes. Screen Time 5% Speaking Time 5%

Audition Piece

Okay guys. So, it's been two weeks since that email, and let me tell you: things have got interesting. So it all started when I went back to look at the email itself, and that's when I noticed that at the bottom, there was this weird sort of...image? Now we know this isn't TJE's logo, and it's kind of tucked away in the corner, so I couldn't work out what it was there for.

Then I go to the TJE website, right, and after a bit of digging, look what I managed to find. The same image!

Now what the hell would a huge tech company like TJE be using this logo for? And what creeped me out was, it looks familiar, right? Like, I felt like I'd seen it somewhere before. And that's when I realised – it's in the government's branding. Like, look at this shit!

And why would TJE and the government be using the same logos? Well this is where it gets even crazier: they have the same contractors. I found this financial contracting company, hidden somewhere on the internet who use – you guessed it – the exact same image. So does this mean tech companies and the actual freaking government are being funded by the same people? How far up does this go?

Like, we all remember the controversies with offshore tax accounts, right? So, these could be the guys that are responsible. And if they were willing to hide money on behalf of the tech companies, then what does that mean for the government? I don't know yet, guys, but I'm gonna find out. So make sure you're subscribed and keeping up to date with my socials because I am not gonna stop until I get answers, and this shit could get real.