

It was a quiet moonlit night, one that made the Cccat feel a slight unrest. They wished so badly to go out to the pumpkin patch this very night but would it be safe? If they went alone would someone think they were up to trouble? All very important information! What if someone mistook their perfectly innocent actions as something more sinister!

Really, all they wanted was to check how the beautiful gords had grown, after all Jack O lantern season was coming up quickly and everyone had to be prepared to carve the most magnificent pumpkins possible! The bigger the better! They had heard rumours about villages that used turnips to create the lanterns in the past but Calabaza found that to be odd. It just didn't look quite right, and after some time when the turnip withered, the faces simply distorted into rather creepy visages. And not in the fun way either.

They had been considering what they would carve this year... A smile? Mm perhaps not its a little too simple. A vampire? Fun but.. perhaps a little too generic. Perhaps one of their friends faces as a surprise! Though.. there was a chance they might find that a little odd. A star with magic could be a rather cute choice, though the CCCat came up with an idea that suited them quite well. A black cat! The perfect idea for cute but still an absolutely lovable spooky vibe.

But then still came the bravery to check the patch. Grabbing a small cloak from the coathanger near their door they slipped it over their shoulders, pulling the hood up and glancing over at the mirror. A perfectly spooky little jacket for the occasion! Opening the door and galloping out into the cold breeze. The autumn air had a different feeling. It was almost supernatural in nature.

Taking brave strides they finally landed at the pumpkin patch, it seemed so many of the gourds had finally reached their full growth! Some simply big enough to fit in two hands and some the size of almost an entire other CCCat! They were in absolute awe of a single pumpkin, larger than all the others that found itself in the very centre of the patch. It was as if they were being called too by the large vegetable. They knew exactly what it meant. This halloween they were going to have a very large project ahead of them!