We'll answer these questions and many more in this section, plus you'll find in-depth coverage of different types of vehicle accidents. Using linked data from police reports and hospital discharge data, we are able to create a database on all drivers hospitalized in the state of Maryland following a vehicular crash. In the past, we have utilized this linked data to examine the nature of injuries for drivers in different types of collisions, or to compare outcomes for those with and without seatbelts, for example. For the purpose of this analysis, however, we focus on diagnoses of pre-existing conditions among all drivers hospitalized in the state of Maryland between the years of 1994 and 1996. Based on the police report, driver culpability (yes/no) was analyzed in terms of various categories of medical conditions included in the hospital discharge summaries. If you plan to file a claim, then get in touch with your insurance company as soon as possible after the accident.

From 2010 to 2019, fatalities rose 36% for bicyclists and nearly doubled for those on foot. Reasons include larger vehicles, faster driving, and digital distractions making walking and biking in the United States far more dangerous than in other comparable nations. Preliminary data also show that even as traffic levels returned to normal after the onset of COVID in March–April 2020, drivers continued to drive at excessive speeds.

Many different terms are commonly used to describe vehicle collisions. The World Health Organization uses the term road traffic injury, while the U.S. Census Bureau uses the term motor vehicle accidents , and Transport Canada uses the term "motor vehicle traffic collision" .
