Education has a very important role in shaping people's skills and abilities to enter the labour market. Education carried out in higher education is still limited to providing theory and small-scale practice with limited intensity. to understand and solve any problems that arise in the labour market, students need to perform the job training activities directly at agencies/institutions which are relevant to their educational program. After graduating from university, students are expected to be able to take the advantage of the knowledge and experience they have acquired during their education and field practices to be used in their work. Furthermore, not only require (higher formal education/post-secondary education/tertiary education), but being involed in community also requires adequate skills (soft skills) and experience to support recognizing the field of work based on the expertise possessed [1].
