Journal Entry November 10th 2011

Well, I have arrived! I've been so excited for so long that it's hard to believe I'm finally here. My flight departed half an hour late from Vancouver International Airport because it was so full. I managed to get an aisle seat, which was lucky because the air hostess said that I might have to sit in the middle seat!

I spent the first couple of hours daydreaming about the sightseeing I could do. I looked in my travel guide and made some changes to the route I have planned out. I had a hard time deciding because there is so much I want to see! Bangkok is in the middle of the country, which means that there is no good way to travel in a circle. Seeing the north first might have the most advantages, as I want to be well rested for trekking in the jungle. I think I might head to Chiang Mai in a few days. Anyways, the flight seemed a lot less exciting by the fourth hour and I spent a bit of time wandering around the plane and napping.

By the time we reached our destination, I was tired and a little nervous. Luckily, the immigration officers were really friendly and I got a cool stamp for crossing the border. I had to wait in line for my travel visa and pick up my belongings from the plane, but soon enough I was sharing a taxi with some friendly backpackers on my way here.

Right now I'm in a guest house close to Koh San Road. It's really hot and humid out and I really feel like I'm travelling! I can't wait!
