

A screenshot was submitted by hals which looked very dated for the following reasons:

- a capital H in Hals - she has had her username as hals for quite some time as evidenced by prior challenge submission screenshots and her current Skype username.
- old avatar
- old mood message
- SSORG alliance chats in the sidebar (this org is now over)
- no date and time

We asked hals to provide the screenshot including the date and time and she obliged, sending us a screenshot with the accurate date and time provided. However, the problem with an old mood message and old Skype profile photo persisted. Soon after sending this screenshot, hals changed her Skype profile picture to the one that was in the screenshots. It was at this time that we contacted the hosts of JPORG, a previous org in which hals had success in this challenge and asked the hosts to send us a copy of her screenshot. The score and screenshots were identical. When asked about her screenshot hals had the option of being forthcoming about the validity of the screenshot but instead took it upon herself to actively put a false date and time in. Based on this we have determined this to be cheating. Please find below both of the screenshots as evidence of this.

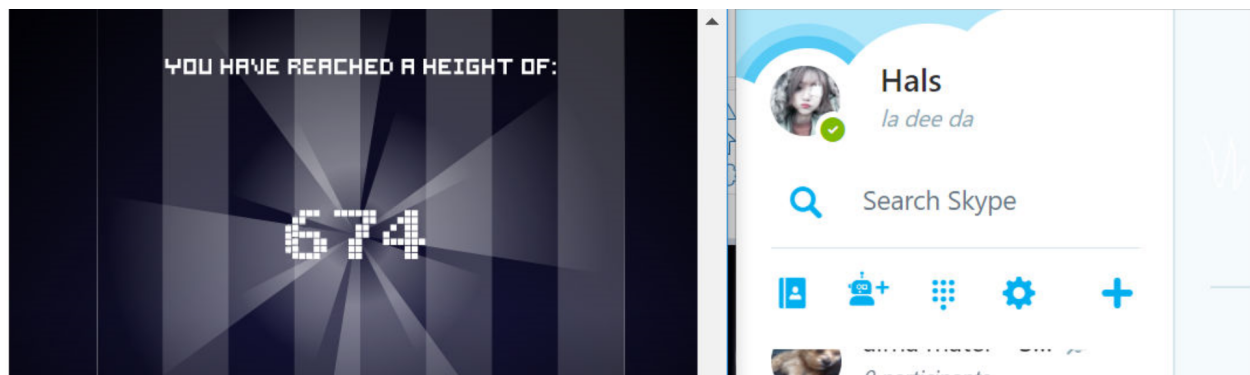

Figure 1. The first screenshot that hals sent in her confessional chat. Please note the absence of date and time, and the capital H in hals.

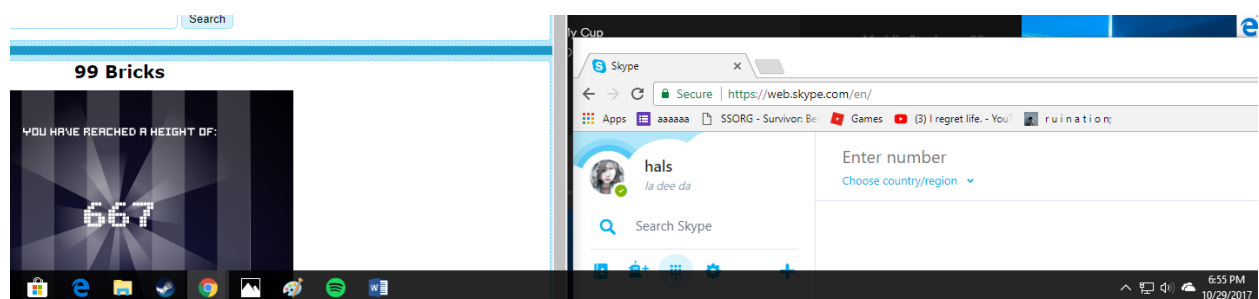

Figure 2. The second screenshot that hals sent in her confessional chat.

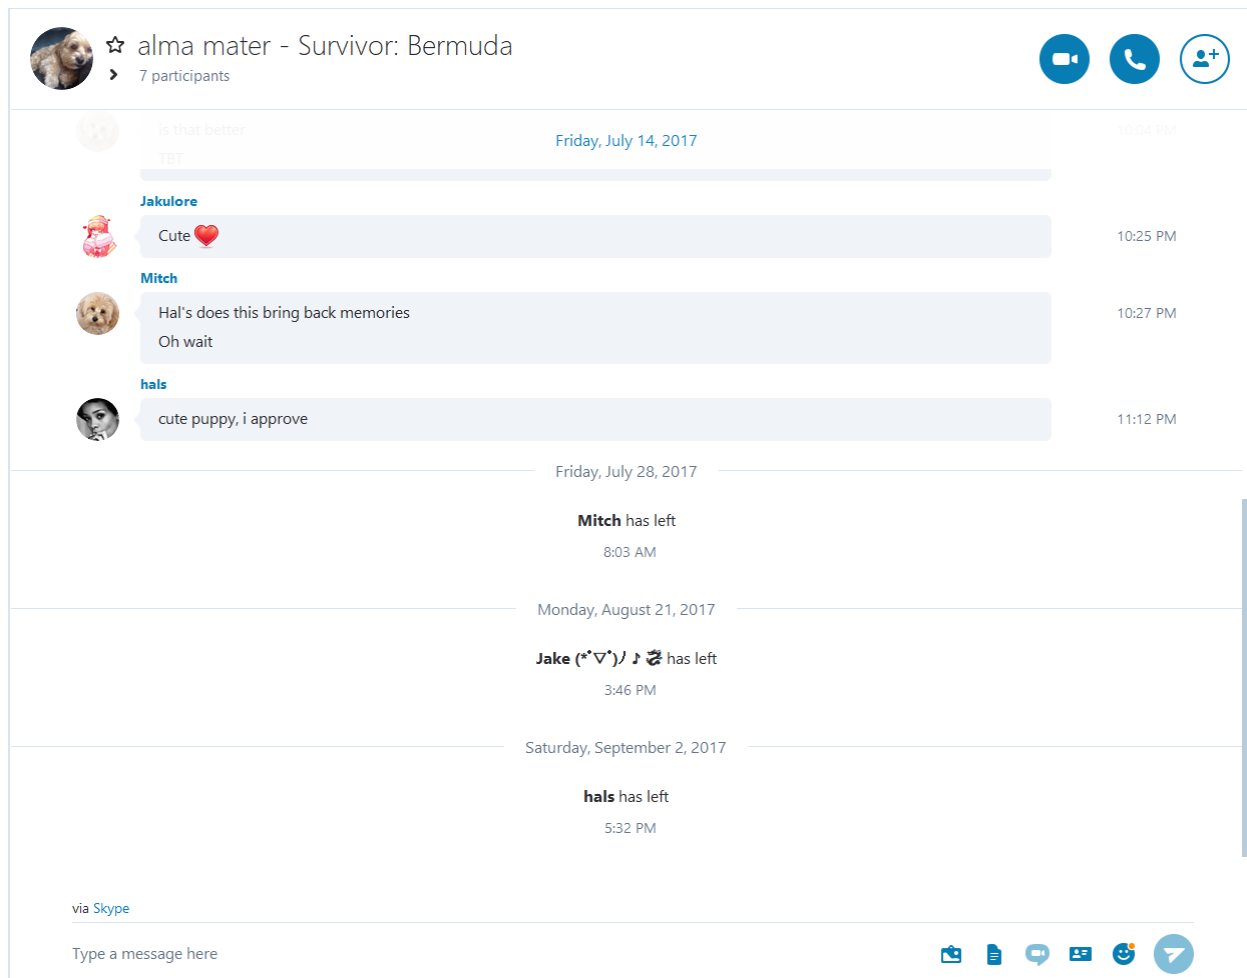

Figure 3. The SSORG alliance chat that was in the original screenshot.

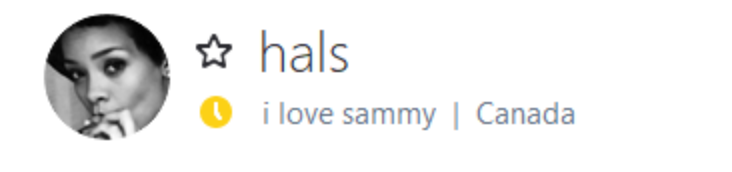

Figure 4. hals's profile photo and mood message.

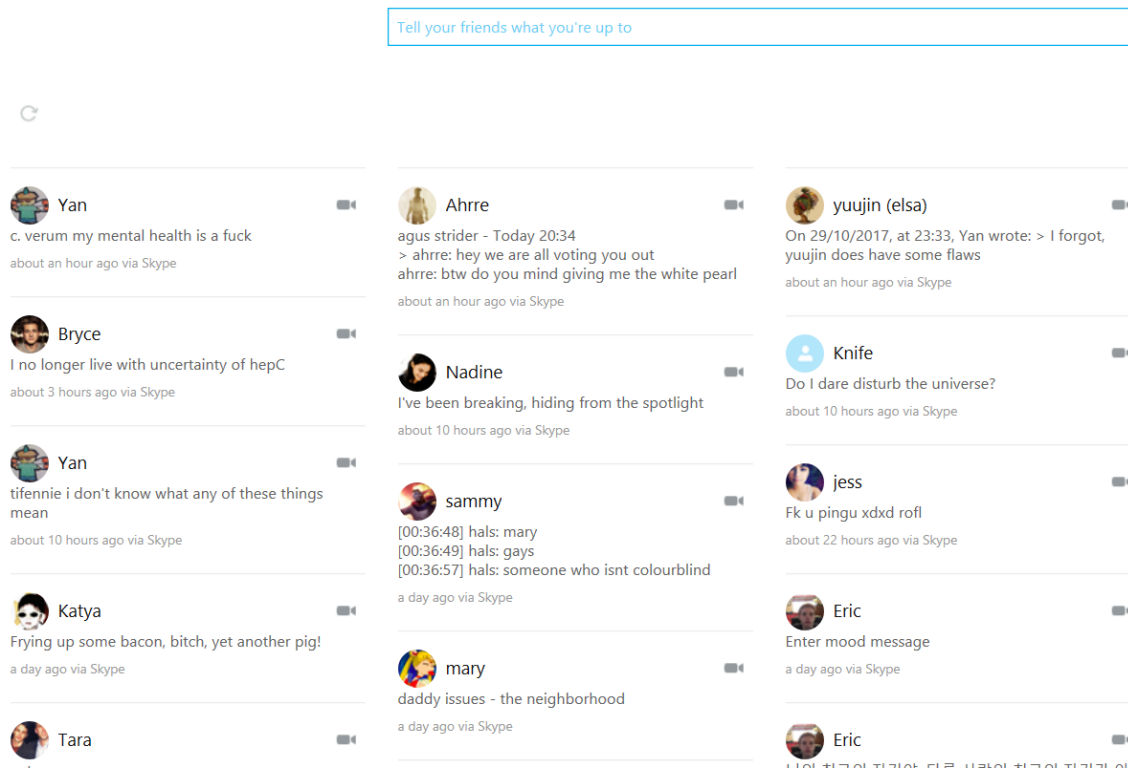

Figure 5. A recent history of mood message changes. Notice there has been no change to hals's mood message in the past 24 hours.

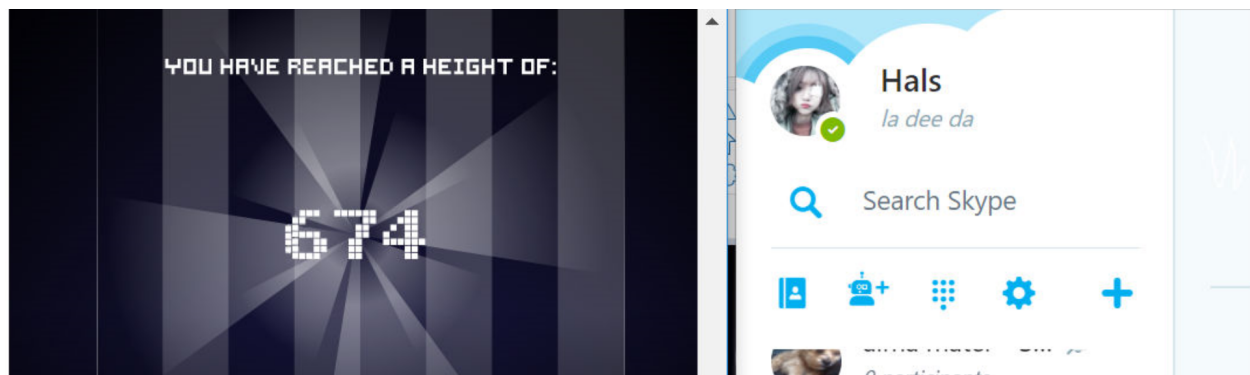

Figure 6. The screenshot that the JPORG hosts sent us from her August submission in JPORG.