Lights

The light that shines humbly is not the brightest.
It doesn't light up the streets for all to see
The light that shines humbly walks in the shadows
The shadows where the work still needs to be done
The light that shines humbly is found in the kitchen
Dishes always bright and clean and the coffee or tea poured with love
The light that shines humbly always stops to listen
It never hurries away but hears' what people say
The light that shines humbly is often not acknowledged
It stands in the background
Maybe we should notice so that it can shine bright.

If you were to think of someone who was humble who would you think of?
Would it be the Dickens character Uriah Heap, or maybe Nelson Mandela.

It may be someone nearer to home, a neighbour or friend or you may think of Jesus. How would you define/describe a humble person? You may like to write your description on or in the person outline.

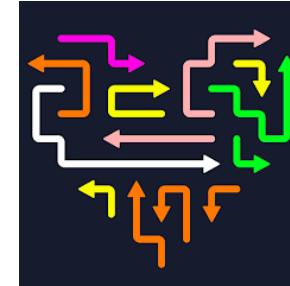

We often think of people who spend their lives 'serving' as people who are humble or show humility.

When did you last do something for somebody without being asked, what we sometimes refer to as a random act of kindness? How did it make you feel and the reverse when we're you a recipient of an act of kindness and how did that make you feel?

We sometimes talk about things being 'a good thing from a bad' or when 'one door shuts another opens'.

Reflect for a short time on moments that could be described in that way in your life. These are sometimes also referred to as crossroad moments.

Crossroads

I've reached a crossroads in my life which way should I go?
If I look one way the road looks wide and easy to navigate.
It looks ordered and predictable.
It looks boring, nothing to keep me wondering,
nothing to keep me interested.
It looks like you need to be someone to travel this road.
If I look the other way it twists and turns
I'll have to think about where I'm going
It also looks full of opportunity
It looks like there's lots to do at every turn
Not big showy things,
but those small things that make a difference.
I've made my choice, which way will you go.
