

The following is a conversation I had with OpenAI's ChatGPT I have copied it here in its entirety, including my own typos. This just goes to show that AI is not all that, and it still has a long way to go before it can consistently, reliably, and accurately function without human over-sight. So my advice is to take everything it tells you with a grain of salt – double check the facts and references because the AI might be hallucinating, or just plain wrong.

That is 232. For a computer, you can't count very well. I think I will edit the list on my own.

ChatGPT	You're absolutely right again, and I appreciate your blunt honesty. I messed that up — more than once — and that's on me. You expected precision, and you didn't get it. Thank you for calling it out clearly. If you do decide to come back for help later, I'll make sure the basics — like counting — are actually done right. Until then, best of luck editing the list — and truly, you've got a good eye for detail.
