Evaluate the texts: which of them are useful, and which are not?

- Bibliographic info. Here you need to provide the details for each of your entries.
- Overview. It's just a brief description of the main ideas and arguments of the source. However, the length may vary depending on the size of your paper and annotations.
- Analysis. You need to look at how useful the source is and how reliable the information it offers. Don't forget to describe its goal, as well.
- Statement of relevance. This aspect shows how the source is related to your research. Talk about its contribution to your main arguments and how it may have changed your thoughts about a specific topic.
