

Avatar: We're talking here about Fernando, an American living in Florida who's in his twenties and is searching for himself in this nature. He's working à 9-5 and can't really focus on anything else because his work is eating all of his time. He dreams of getting rich and successful, impressing his family and traveling the world without getting stressed when the paycheck comes in.

Here's where I understand that this business course has nothing to do with business except the name!

Hey [Reader's Name],

Firstly, let me introduce myself.

I'm Peter, a 21-year-old citizen who just dropped out of college, and here's what shook me.

I was studying like a regular day in my college in Florida, completing my courses, and then came the Business course.

I got ready for the course, and the teacher talked about Steve Jobs—this genius man, the one who innovated in the phone industry.

That man made many of us dream, and here's what shook me: This course has nothing to do with business except the name.

I just understood that Steve Jobs didn't study "business" in college to get where he was. He didn't follow the "regular" path to land where he was.

I was onto something; I'm sure that if I could understand what he had done, I could achieve what he did!

And I've succeeded! I've cracked his secrets, and now I'm a millionaire who got rich following Steve Jobs's steps.

I've written all his secrets, adding some of mine and some experience.

So now, you've got two choices:
