General Tips

- If the goal is to complete banners? Ideally, do not pull until you have 200 crystals.
- Do not use diamonds for anything else... or at least minimize their usage. Nearly everything else is merely using diamonds to accelerate progress. There is one major exception: each season has a few items in the store which cost diamonds. Please note, you cannot acquire these after the season ends.
- Stellerites have an abysmal conversion rate to Diamonds, so using them this way is highly discouraged, unless you are at the end of season, and have few other options to acquire something.
- Unless you are both willing and able to spend very large sums of money, you should learn to skip banners, evolutions, etc. A lot of them. We just got in-game housing. No real-life homeless or bankrupt nikkis please.

When spending $$

- If paying money, the best bang-for-your-buck for crystals is the monthly diamond pass. Nearly everything else in the shop has an “expediency tax,” and costs, often considerably, more for crystals in the long-term.
- Waiting until the final week of a season allows you to know if you will like next season’s items more than the current season. More informed = better purchasing decisions.

Steam-specific Thriftiness

- Many steam items and cards can be sold for Steam credit, which can be used to purchase things in Nikki.
- This includes cards received from playing Infinity Nikki through Steam. Note, this only applies to those who are also spending on the game through Steam. Effectively, they are a random discount; the cards range in value from cents to dollars.
- You can spend in specific increments to avoid over-spending using this guide.
