What is Business Continuity

Business Continuity Planning is crucial in this day and age where any unplanned disruption in services can cost a company hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of dollars.

Your plan should include resilient critical systems, infrastructure, and business functions. It should also be able to fully or partially restore infrastructure and business functionality after an outage. In addition, it should involve everyone in your organization to learn how to work during system outages through documentation, planning, testing, and regular exercises and drills.

Why Your Business Needs Business Continuity

Your Backup Needs A Backup

Backup, backup, backup! Everyone knows that each business should already have some form of data backup.

However, it may come as news to you that aside from backing up your data, you also require business continuity. This allows you to run applications in the cloud while they get the onsite infrastructure fixed. This is truly a game changer.

Problems Will Arise

IT disasters come in two forms: a) natural calamities such as tornadoes and floods or b) human error like accidental data deletion, poor security habits, or damage to computer hardware.

Both kinds of disasters are unavoidable. Therefore, it is imperative to have technology in place that will allow your business to continue its operations in spite of the issue.

Downtime Is Costly

One of the factors that hurt a business' productivity and revenue is downtime. It is critical that you have the ability to run applications from backup instances of virtual servers so you can go on with your operations while the servers are being restored.
