Dear Wikipedia Editors, new and seasoned,

I'm so delighted that you will be joining this public, collaborative action. We aim to make some good progress on our writing and editing and to have a fun time doing it. This will be a relaxed learning and creative environment. Here are a few essential things to prepare BEFORE the edit-a-thon. They are quick and easy and will allow you more time to focus on writing and/or editing.

- Before Sunday, March 10th
  PLEASE make yourself a user name on Wikipedia. It takes 2 minutes! This will help the editing on Sunday go more quickly and smoothly. Follow this link

- If you want to practice before the big day, here is a "game" tutorial for new editors. Just a way to gain familiarity. Not necessary, but fun and interesting.

- Remember to read the wikipedia notability guidelines for new persons being entered to the wikipedia canon and to bring any relevant notes or research with you. You'll want to include:
  a.) 7-10 reliable sources/links to articles about the artist
  b.) the artist's early life and education
  c.) the artist's career (places worked, exhibitions etc.)
  d.) a list of her major works

- Here is a list of Jewish Women Artists for whom you may be interested in creating a page (and for some of them), editing a page.

- Please follow THIS LINK to let us know who you are and what Jewish female artist you will be creating and/or editing a page for on Sunday, March 10th. It's great to collaborate if you are in the same room and want to work on an artist together.

- For those joining remotely
  The Museum will be sending you a Zoom link for use on the 10th. There will be chat available as well. It's great for asking questions and, well, "chatting" and will help our remotes feel more in the room with us.

- We ask remote participants to share the results of your work from Thursday (or slightly later) on this page. Alternatively, you can send an email to: akurson@ojmche.org and we will post it

- Bring your joy, your sense of humor, your laptop and power cord. Light snacks will be served.

See you all on Sunday, March 10th, 2024 from 11am-3pm at the Oregon Jewish Museum and Center for Holocaust Education or online from around the world!

Thank you,

Shoshana Gugenheim Kedem
