

Dear Editor:

Kentucky's schools have lots of problems: funding 13% lower than in 2008 thanks to legislative budget cuts, a chasm between the haves and have-nots when it comes to technology and internet access, not enough mental-health professionals or counselors, no money for teacher professional development, textbooks, new schools or building repairs.

You know what Kentucky doesn't have? A problem caused by Critical Race Theory. Challenge [NAME OF LEGISLATOR HERE] to name one school in [NAME OF CITY OR COUNTY HERE]. He/She can't, of course, because no school in Kentucky follows that curriculum. But [LEGISLATOR] thinks that grandstanding will distract us from noticing that he/she has no solutions to the REAL problems in education. Is [LEGISLATOR] unable to come up with solutions to the real problems, or just unwilling? You decide.
