Before i started:

I envisioned this going pretty easy until it was time to actually do it. I didn't think making a website would be so confusing because many teens make their own for their small businesses. The genre I chose was making a website. I chose this because every young teen nowadays spends most of their time on the internet. I also felt this was the best way of explaining what I needed to explain along with some pictures. I was excited about making it even though I knew it would be a challenge, I felt it would be really cool to have something that I made on my own. I already knew what I was going to talk about because I am mainly targeting. I also chose teens because I feel like they aren't really informed on their background.

Getting it done:

I created my website on wix.com and at first it was pretty challenging because the website was telling me I had to pick a genre on how I wanted my website to be laid out. It doesn't sound that challenging but it was very confusing because when i clicked on some of them it would have a layout that i wouldn't want. I had to just pick one which I chose the blog one and changed the layout to how it would best fit for my liking. It was very frustrating for me because getting everything to how I wanted was not easy at all. After a couple of playing with the website itself i eventually figured everything out and it all played out well.

Now, getting to this point wasn't easy either. I did not know from the jump that I wanted to create a website. I was thinking of doing other genres like comics and videos but I couldn't find a way to get my point across well with those.

I didn't really want to add a lot of text because like i said i am targeting Dominican teens and teenagers don't really like to read. I got straight to the point of what I wanted them to know.

Now that it's done:

I feel accomplished because I am now done with the website and I feel a sense of relief. It was kind of fun making the website because this is something I have never done before. When I got the hang of it, I started to make it into my own. For instance, changing the colors and inserting pictures that I felt was best for each category. I also edited the structure of how everything was laid out. I wanted to add more information but i didn't want to make it too long to the point where you just look at it and it looks like too much to read. I feel like everything went well at the end and it turned out pretty good.
