

Many Hands Make Light Work or Too Many Cooks Spoil the Broth

Karen Harrison, TNSTEP

The successful recipe for actively engaging board members lies somewhere in between these two mottos. The goal is the balance of co-operative working, all pulling in the same direction towards a common goal, which makes the work easier--while avoiding having too many people's ideas going into one specific work, which can cause confusion and inconsistency.

During this hands-on session, participants will use tools to: a) discover board members areas of expertise and how to utilize their skill sets purposefully and effectively; b) understand what motivates your board members to serve; and c) learn ways to increase your board members commitment and connection to your Parent Center's mission, resulting in your organizations growth and success.
