Why it sucks to be a fly

Have you ever wanted to fly around, have amazing reflexes and die within four weeks. Well me too. That's why I have written about the life of a fly but the more I have learnt about being a fly I've realized that it kind of sucks, more than a little bit really sucks. In fact, it sucks more than a vacuum cleaner and here's why.

As soon as you hatch from your comfy little egg home you realize that you're in a rotting animal carcass! Oh by way your one of those little white things you find in rotting stuff called maggots. Anyway the mother fly is all like "congratulation you have just been hatched remember you have only 28 days to live and that's even if you don't get squashed, sprained, slapped,whacked, eaten or caught by a ninja with a pair of chopsticks ok bye have fun eating this dead carcass". Then you will never see her again.

In this stage of life you will spend literally your whole day eating which doesn't seem too bad until you remember that you are eating a rotting dead animal and your sole purpose in life right now is to eat enough food to grow into a little pesty creature that will vomit on to someone else's food sound fun right. You will do this for about five days with means that you only have 23 days left of your life after that you will find a nice dark place and start to transform like a monster from a horror movie. You start to develop a hard outer shell, you will grow legs from your side and sprout wings out of your back and just like that boom you are full grown fly which bring us to the how the majority of how your life will be spent eating.

You may think eating for most of your life does not sound that bad believe me I would not complain if I got to eat for my most my life but that would before I realize what I will be eating for a starter you might have a good helping of horse poo than you might move on to some half eaten chips that were starting to grow mould and for dessert you have choice of a dead animal that got hit by car or you can have a puddle of vomit yummy right but you have to remember before you eat your delicious meal you got vomit up all of you other delicious meals on to your new meal so It kind of like you get a second helping of you last meal except its still warm and it comes straight from the stomach they do this so they can digest the food easier and you also get the joy vomiting in to other people food so that's fun.

But you know what sucks most about being a fly your life is constantly under threat there would not be one time when you safe. You would never know if you are about to be eaten a random frog or get sprayed with poison at any moment you could die it sucks even more because you 28 days to start with and here is some stuff that would likely kill you there's frog, spiders, wasp, ants, bird, beetles, crickets, mites, lizards, mosquitoes, prey mantis, fish, ladybugs, dogs, cat and unsuspecting grandmas in fact flies are in so much danger that they get eaten a plant imagen having that on your grave Max Falvey lies here death by plant ha what an idiot.

In conclusion being a fly sucks so don’t become a magical wizard and turn yourself into a fly. unless you like eating a dog turd and vomiting it on someones else's food if so maybe this is the perfect life for you.
