An Area 51 History: 70 years of lies? [Loon]

Subject: From the beginning of Area 51 to the present day - 70 years of lies from the United States Government
Date: Fri, 1 May 1998 22:57:05 -0700

UFOs as we know them were visiting Earth much longer than most people realize. Records have been found as early as the 1850's (probably even earlier if you look hard enough.) Anyway, the United States government realized that these things weren't going to go away on their own and became personally interested in them. By about late 1927 to early 1928 they had captured between two and five of these alien crafts. With the technology of the day, they could do little more than visual inspections of the ships, so it became clear that they needed a dedicated facility to tear down the ships and cannibalize anything they could use (which was quite a bit more than they had released to the public e.g. the transistor.) So they had this great idea for a super high-tech base with technology that was decades ahead of its time (remember, this is 1928 - we're talking vacuum tubes and reel-to-reel tape here) but where were they going to get the money?

The date is October 29, 1929. The stock market has crashed and the economy is in ruins at least it was for about a month. At the first sign of economic recovery, the government stole several billion dollars from the American people to construct Area 51, turning what would have been a minor recession that probably would have been forgotten into the worst economic depression before or since.

The base was completed circa 1932 and fully operational about 3 months later. As planned, the ships were torn down and analyzed with the help of their "supercomputers." Keep in mind that the computers they had at Area 51 were far more advanced than anything that humans had ever built, but they were still shit (forgive the language) and they knew that, so the first thing they did was rip the computer out of one of the ship and turned it over to archaeologists they had hired (and it should be noted here that they all turned up dead within a week of translating the alien language.) It took longer to translate the language than anyone had thought and World War II was in full swing. The United States was working on a prototype weapon based on the explosive "torpedoes" used in one of the alien ships. We had been in the war for a while and the government was getting tired of it. The prototype weapon was far from finished, but they figured what the hell, and decided to test it in battle. It should be noted that the fact that they crippled the Pacific fleet was not the only reason that they wanted to nuke Japan. They probably could have let that go, but United States intelligence officers found evidence that the Japanese were close to completing two of their own interstellar crafts, presumably from reverse-engineered alien crafts (just as the Americans were about to do at Area 51, which will be covered in a minute.) Guess where they were being stored? Right, Hiroshima and Nagasaki, so we nuked the cities, apparently destroying any record of their existence. This also happened to win the war for us. Score one for the United States.

Finally, in late June of 1947, the Americans completed, rounded up a crew and launched their version of an interstellar craft of their own.

The goal was to move out past Pluto, go to warp, fly around Alpha Centauri and be back at Area 51 by Independence Day, when the technology was supposed to be revealed to the world. The ship was three days late and ended up crashing in the New Mexico desert. The crash site was found minutes after it hapened and the human bodies were removed and replaced with alien bodies to be found by some farmer that was too drunk for anybody to believe. The bodies and wreckage were later removed and disposed of. Yes, the autopsy film was most likely forged.

The U.N. was formed for one major purpose: to keep information about aliens from the world. This international treaty was ratified by all the members on January 1st, 1950. One of the provisions in the treaty is that is to be reviewed and voted on again every fifty years (that's right, it will be up for review on January 1st, 2000, the millennium.) It was also created to unite the world under one government so that we would be admitted into the galactic union of planets that the aliens had been trying to get us to join for the past 100 years.
