

Islam and the Future of Tolerance - a film digest

The goal of this film was to encourage conversation on the topic of Islam, and that it definitely did.

Discussion of Islam is fraught. Writing a work of fiction gets you a fatwa (like Salman Rushdie), making a film gets you killed (like Theo Van Gogh), those that advocate reform live with round the clock security (like Ayaan Hirsi Ali and Maajid Nawaz), and no who you are, you will get called a racist Islamophobe.

This conversation has a massive vacuum that will be filled, and likely by the people you least want to fill it.

Resource added by Anne of PhiloSophia:

Do also look into the work of Salim Mansur, the Canadian political scientist. He has gathered his writings on Islam into this book:

<https://www.amazon.ca/Quran-Problem-Islamism-Reflections-Dissident/dp/1927618088/>

Peterson has mentioned Salim and I do see a conversation between these two Canadians as being potentially fruitful.

Salim is devout but also liberal (in the philosophical, not the political sense). He is running for office on the conservative side of politics this year: <http://salimmansur.ca/>

He is a strong supporter of Israel and views Anwar Sadat as a great hero/martyr.

He is the best of the public Muslims in my view.
