

Forgive me. This will get ramby in spots.

The biggest irony for me is that all of this is happening during Holy Week, a sacred week for both Christians and Jews alike. Palm Sunday was this past Sunday, when we celebrate Jesus riding into Jerusalem on a donkey. The people sang out "Hosanna, Hosanna," which can be translated to "Save us! Save us!"

We know this story, because our pastors love to point it out. They will then say, the Jews were looking to get them out of their predicament. But Jesus wasn't going to save them the way they wanted. He had his own agenda that would be "radical, amazing, and revolutionary."

And then we as Christians throw ourselves into Good Friday, and then cap it off with the huge celebration of Easter, because that's the true victory. The real victory. God triumphing over death and establishing His Lordship over all the earth. He has won! Yayyy!

Except...

Except...

The Jews are still held captive by the Roman Empire.

* * *

Imagine living all your life as an oppressed minority. You're loved down on. Told to assimilate, abandon your culture so you can fit in. Your people are profiled, thrown in prison for the slightest of offenses. Your young men are handed, your young women harassed. You pray for a savior to come and burn down your establishment, set your people free. You want that savior to be like Moses, challenging the evil leader and producing signs and plagues, then hurt the stubborn, foolish leader where it hurts. You want revenge, you want justice, you want freedom.

So you hear about this prophet who is going around

Forgive me. This will get rambly in spots

The biggest iron for me is that all of this is happening during Holy Week, a sacred week for both Christians and Jews alike. Palm Sunday was this past Sunday, when we celebrate Jesus riding into Jerusalem on a donkey. The people sang out

Hosanna, Hosanna, which can be translated to Save us! Save us! We know this story because our pastors love to point it out. They will then say, the Jews were looking to get them out of their predicament. But Jesus wasn't going to save them the way they wanted

He had his own agenda that would be "radical, amazing, and revolutionary"

And then we as Christians throw ourselves into Good Friday, and then cap it off with the huge celebration of Easter, because that's the true Victory. The real victory. God triumphing over death and establishing His Lordship over all the earth. He has won. Yayy!

Except...

Except... The Jews are still held captive by the Roman Empire.

*

X

I imagine living all your life as an oppressed Minority. You're moved down on. Told to assimilate, abandon your culture so you can fit in. Your people are persecuted, thrown in prison for the slightest of offenses. Your young men are handed over, your young women harassed, you pray for a savior to come and overthrow the establishment, set your people free. You want that savior to be like Moses, challenging the evil leader and producing Signs and plagues, then hurt the stubborn, foolish leaders. Where it hurts. You seek vengeance, you want justice, you want freedom.

So you hear about this prophet who is going around