Introduction

Glowfics are terribly inconvenient for the layperson to navigate, so this document is intended to make it easier for them, in particular those following The Bayesian Conspiracy's analysis cast. I will be updating as we go along, but I read slowly so I cannot promise I will be able to keep ahead every week.

I have opened the document for public comment so if you read ahead (or I'm behind) and want to help, please leave a comment or Suggestion. If you do decide to help out there are a few rules:

- 1. Minimize Spoilers.

It may be impossible to have no spoilers, since one of the things I'm going for is to include a helpful "when to stop reading", which will be difficult to find unless the situation is unique. If you don't think you can provide a useful cue without spoiling, just include a link for the first post after your proposed chapter break and I'll deal with it later.

- 2. This Document Is Not Yours.

Please don't take it personally if I reject or modify your suggestion. Black text has been approved by me and should be treated as a permalink, which means other people can refer to the chapter #s and titles directly. If you think I made a bad decision, let me know with a Comment rather than editing black text.

- 3. But I Do Want It To Work For You.

Leave a comment if you think you have a better chapter title, or a more clear way to denote the end-of-chapter marker, or if I just made a mistake somewhere. If you have other meta comments, @ me in the Discord.

- 4. Keep It Simple, Stupid.

I'm most interested in targeting narrative beats, with the second priority being that a chapter should be a digestible chunk. Chapters longer than 5,000 words should be broken up if possible. Shorter chapters (<3,000 words) should have a justification for breaking where they do, e.g., there is a scene change, a major topic shift, or a fun cliffhanger. Point-of-view shifts almost always get a chapter break in normal fiction, but with a glowfic, those may be more difficult to pinpoint since each tag is first-person from its own character, but they can be found (see, e.g., the break into Chapter 5).
