

(Translated from French)

I've been a public service employee with Environment Canada since 2010. Since 2015, I've been involved as a steward. I particularly enjoy helping others and contributing to a healthier workplace where employees feel listened to and supported. My advanced knowledge of the union and my experience on a board of directors have equipped me to take a seat on the national executive in 2020. The first few years enabled me to adapt to this new, more complex role and to better understand the associated tasks. Now that I've mastered the role, I'm standing for election in the hope of continuing the work I've started. In the uncertain political and environmental climate of the next few years, I believe it's essential to stress the importance of our jobs in science, and to fight to preserve them while maintaining fair working conditions. I also want to continue defending the SP Group's interests within PIPSC and working to improve its environmental footprint. Finally, I want to contribute to the promotion of the French language. I aspire to build a strong and united SP Group ready to protect science.
