

Unione Corse Backstory

Marcel Francisci born in 1919 fought in WW2 for the Free French Forces in Italy Being awarded multiple medals for selfless acts of heroism during combat.

Once returned from combat Marcel joined the Corsican Mafia smuggling cigarettes between Tangiers and Marseilles whilst gathering prominent narcotic contacts in several Arab countries after Jo Renucci (The leader of the mafia) died Francisci took control of the Mafia once he took over his brother Nael Francisci joined the mafia after seeing the vast stockpiles of wealth Marcello was generating.

Marcel began to delegate management positions to underlings so that he could focus on expansion of the Mafia leading to them forming their own gangs. With tensions rising with these new gangs, war broke out with several crushing defeats Marcelo Francisci and his brother Nael Francisci fled to America first arriving in California.

The brothers began to traffic Heroin and firearms using his old contacts from the Arabian world allowing Marcelo to rebuild the Mafia recruiting new members. With Marcelo and his brother gaining prominence in california cops began to pay more attention to them and after Marcelo refused to payoff the police they executed several raids on his properties forcing him to go into hiding with his brother once again where they then took several members of Unione Corse in the back of a truck on a road trip to the outskirts of New York where they quickly took out several rivals.

When things got too easy in the outskirts of New York the brothers wanted in on more action so decided on expanding inwards to the more heavily contested South Side of New York for the opportunity to control the more lucrative region which brought upon many new challenges for the brothers. Whilst beginning to arrive in the city they met several mysterious men who invested a large sum of money and guns to assist in the expansion of Unione Corse however their intentions are unknown.
