Sochi International Airport

Sochi International Airport named after V. I. Sevastyanov (IATA: AER, ICAO: URSS) is the international airport of Sochi, Krasnodar Krai. The largest hub of local and international airlines in the Southern Federal District of Russia.

It is located in the Adler district of Sochi, which is why the name "Adler Airport" is also common. It serves the largest Russian resort, its agglomeration (including Tuapse), other gravitating territories and Abkhazia (245 thousand people) with a total permanent population of about 900 thousand people. It has the status of an airport of federal significance.

The airport ranks 5th in the country in terms of passenger turnover (11,076,621[3] passengers) after Moscow Sheremetyevo, Domodedovo, Vnukovo and St. Petersburg Pulkovo. The distance from the airport to Moscow is about 1360 km, the flight time is a little more than 4 hours.

The operator of the airport is JSC "Sochi International Airport". The management company is LLC "Aerodynamics".

Sheremetyevo International Airport Terminal F

The country's largest international airport, Sheremetyevo named after Pushkin, is the leader in passenger air travel turnover in the country, carrying out both domestic and external flights. The airport is located in the capital region in the northwest and is conditionally divided into two parts: Sheremetyevo-1 and Sheremetyevo-2, visually they are located on different sides of the airfield. In addition to the main flights, the airport accepts cargo and transit transportation, including transatlantic flights. The structure of the airport is quite extensive and multifunctional, and it is divided into six terminals:

A – accepts business aviation;
B – only for domestic flights;
C, E, F – international air travel;
D – domestic and international flights;
For passengers making international flights, Terminal F is of the greatest interest.
