ABSTRACT

This abstract is written in Indonesian and English which consists of one paragraph, consisting of 150-250 words, Calibri font size 10 points, single spaced. Abstract contains: 1) main problems and objectives; 2) method; 3) research findings; 4) conclusion. Abstracts are equipped with three to five words of keywords. Keywords are the most defining/influencing words/terms in the text and contain the meaning of a concept, must contain enough information to index and can help search. Keywords can be single words or compound words. Writing keywords starts from the most common and important in the text, and is separated by commas. Abstract writing and keywords in English uses italics.

A. Introduction

The manuscript should be written on A4 paper (210 mm x 297 mm) and should be 20 to 25 pages (approximately 6,000 words). The margins should be as per the template, with 1.2 spacing and Calibri 12 font. All pages should be numbered sequentially in the bottom right margin. The manuscript should be written in Indonesian or standard English. The "Introduction" section contains the background, problem statement, objectives, and literature review. All sections are structured in a flowing narrative format, in sequence. The literature review includes existing studies and research and the state of the art. At the end, a position statement should be provided to compare the study with previous studies to demonstrate the gap analysis and other research.

B. Method

This section explains the materials and methods, as well as the steps followed in conducting the research. A brief rationale for the method. The method is briefly rationalized to help readers evaluate so readers can assess its appropriateness, reliability, and validity.

C. Results and Discussion

The manuscript is written in the same font as the introduction. This section presents the results of the study, analysis, and discussion. This section must be given a separate title; it should not be simply titled "Results and Discussion." The title should be tailored to the content of the study. The results represent a presentation of field findings. A beneficial discussion begins with a brief comparative review of the findings of other researchers for dialogue, critique, and analysis, followed by a discussion and analysis of the findings/results. The results section may include other forms of information presentation (tables, figures, graphs, photographs, and diagrams). In tables, the title is placed at the top, and the source is listed below. Meanwhile, for images, graphs, photographs, and diagrams, the title is placed below, followed by the source, in the following format:

Table 1. Title (Calibri 11, single-spaced)

No	Village	Number of Farmer Groups	Land Area	Description
1	xxxx	0	00000	xxx
2	xxxxxxxxxx	0	0000	xxx
3	xxxx	0	000	xxx
4	xxxxxxxx	0	000	xxx
5	xxxxxxxx	0	000	xxx

Source: Calibri 11, single space

D. Conclusion and Recommendations

The conclusion is presented briefly, at least answering the problems and objectives of the research.

Next, academic recommendations, concrete follow-up actions, or policy implications based on the conclusions reached. The content of the recommendations should align with the discussion.

Bibliography

The sources used in writing this article are primary sources (80% of the total references). Primary sources include accredited journals, seminar proceedings, dissertations, theses, master's theses, and reference books. Each article contains at least 20 (twenty) bibliographies, all published within the last ten years. The bibliography is arranged alphabetically with tabs on the second and subsequent lines, while the first line is untabbed. For citations, use the American Psychological Association (APA style, 7th edition). In-text citations are recommended, and Mandeley is recommended.
