

On January 7th 1927 a group of coal miners in whistle creek Wyoming during the detonation of a charge happened upon an untapped aquifer. due to the sudden influx of water the mine was subsequently flooded with water and abandoned. With the source of the town's income removed the locals were forced to move away. Not all could accept this fate and many of the miners and their family stayed behind believing coal could still be extracted from the mine. Months later having realized it to be impossible the remaining towns folk left leaving behind a ghost town. Though one member of the town could not leave. 5ft 10in brown hair 23 years old female, chained to the bottom of the mine yet still alive.

In this world, each person is born with 2 innate supernatural abilities. Most given abilities are either useless or never discovered over the duration of one's life. This girl was graced with the ability to live forever. The gift of immortality. As well as the ability to create water. Though everyone is born with supernatural ability's those with abilities that break the laws of physics set by Isaac newton are classified as witches and sentenced to death. Though having the ability to live forever makes this impossible as found out on the third execution attempt. After taking a vote it was decided the best course of action would be to chain her to the bottom of the local mine and seal the passage. At the age of 13 the girl was placed at the bottom of the mine, chained, and the passage was sealed, forgotten. Left to live forever at the bottom of the mine the girl tried to devise a plan to escape. Given the ability to create water she would not go thirsty, but it would not be long before hunger set in thus the escape plan must start immediately. The plan was as follows fill the sealed room with water until the pressure became too great and the passage was forced open. By the time the water reached head level the chains will have rusted, and may be easy to break. A formidable plan for a 13-year-old. Though many flaws in the plan were overlooked the girl set to work filling the room with water. 7 years later the living husk of a girl lived still, at the age of 20 filled with an unending hatred for those that placed her there. With the size of the room having been grossly underestimated due to the lack of light the water only reached neck level. Though through all the pains she continued. 3 years later the water level had reached the top of the cave. Though the room was full of water the girl did not stop creating water. On a certain day in January a loud explosion was heard by the girl. Having been the only sound besides water to heat in the past 10 years she was terrified. Suddenly, she could see. Not with her eyes but by feeling the shifts in the water around her. The girl now a young woman felt 3 coal miners in the water. The rush of the water hitting them against the sides of the cave knocking them unconscious leaving them to drown with her. Having been completely under water for 2 years now the woman embraced the feeling of drowning, and she no longer feared it. With the water, she could feel the lasts breaths leave the miners throats and float to the surface, and her water filled them. The rage she once had, had now left her and had left in its place the seeds of insanity. The woman realized for the first time in her life she had friends. 3 new friends. Or 2 new friends, and a meal.
