

Personal concepts

1. What is beauty? What is love?

- Beauty is basically about things that are aesthetically pleasing, pleasurable, and enjoyable. For me, it's listening to amazing music, art pieces that flow, silhouettes that move together in a outfit piece, etc., But even without the physical world, it can be about someone's personality, an interesting course of events, or other things that are powerful and moving.
- It's all about the power of invoking awe and that's what I aim to do a lot. Having a lot of Venus placements in my zodiac, I deeply value a lot of aesthetics. I've always been very sensitive to my surroundings, pleasing music, and fashionable clothes or art. Romanticizing and beautifying my emotions has led me to create a lot of meaningful art
- I also think a lot of beauty has to do with images. For me personally, grandiose visions of the finer things in life and living in a colorful and rich lush atmosphere is beauty.
- For me, beauty is basically power. By looking attractive, having the sexy physique with the muscles and the abs, wearing nice clothes, styling my hair, and beautifying my emotions and the world around me, I am essentially seeking power over both my own life and over how others treat me. Unfortunately, people tend to only respect you when you're attractive. And having struggled with being respected, I often use my fashion sensibilities as a way to command respect so that no one can look down on me again. Beauty is something which is useful for creating an image, a timeless impression.
- Beauty also gives you opportunities to seek money and that would fund my ability to seek constant artistic fulfillment. This is why my childhood dream was to be an actor or singer; so I can create beautiful and moving artwork that stands the test of time
- Love is a very passionate and deep thing for me. It's when you can feel safe with another person in their arms. I've always craved intimacy and the idea of having someone that you can value. I've always focused on my relationships with other people and being a rather morally discerning person, it's very hard for me to trust others and let people in. I'm always drawing boundaries and cutting people off because I can't trust everyone. So for me, love is when someone is there for you and you know you can confide in them.

2. What are your most important values?

At first it was extremely hard for me to answer this question. I feel a lot of things and have strong opinions but I've always felt like a wandering pond. I'm too busy floating in the clouds to define myself. But these are things that matter to me below: 🙌

- Have a strong inner world with imagination. My entire world has been just that. The base of my entire personality is dominated by imagery, patterns, and imagination. The world has always been a rather complex and depressing place and living in my fantasy lands and abstract worlds has saved me. Romanticize the fuck out of life. Don't be like those boring normies and don't be some suburban beige basic bitch. Live in glamour, live like a movie, live like a king or queen

- Don't be some NPC. Always find your inner authenticity because that's where true beauty comes from.
- Let people be. I hate when people try to assert dominance, abuse others, or restrict control. This is why I can't stand a lot of homophobia; why are you mad that someone is gay? My whole life, people have constantly violated my boundaries and treated me as if I have no human rights. That kind of thinking is morally repulsive and repugnant.
- Don't be cruel to others. Always be kind when you can. Treat others as they would treat you. But if they were cruel to me first, I wouldn't give any craps about taking the high road. I'm a proud hater and will gladly hold a grudge
- I will always be loyal to the people in my circle. I will be grateful for them and cherish them. For the people outside of that, I don't mind them. Not in a bad sense but I'm okay to be cordial and pleasant with them. But for those who have wronged me or my loved ones, they will be marked out of my life (but they know I'm blocking them from my space and continue to invade it just because they can)
- People should live peacefully. Everyone deserves peace and the right to happiness. People deserve human rights, dignity, freedom, and democracy. And when someone tries to threaten that, that person deserves to be punished brutally. A bad peace is never good when it means being a bystander and not standing up to abuse. But peace should be protected
- I prefer to live my life in the most romanticized way possible. One of my biggest values in a non-moralistic sense (since all my values are moralistic) is to live like it's 2004. The reason I say this is because as I've grown up, I've realized how awful life really is. Personally, I've struggled a lot with depression, loneliness, rejection, and external bullying. But even sociologically, the world is politically....dark. That's why for me, the 2000s and 2010s are magical for me. They are mystical and invoke awe in me. It's fascinating but also scary to ponder about how people born in the 1980s-90s back then were the same age that I am now. That passage of time creates a lot of shock in me. And that's why I prefer to live in aestheticized eras of the 2000s, to relive that spark that became so lost in the post-Covid world.
- Coziness and aesthetic pleasure is very important to me. I'm not always a stop and smell the flowers person but that being said, if something is not pretty or pleasing, it makes me drained.

3. Do you have any sort of spiritual/religious beliefs, and why do you hold (or don't) those beliefs in the first place?

- I am a Hindu but I do incorporate some Buddhism practices. I'm also considering getting into white magic and Wiccanism since I think it can be compatible with Hinduism. I try to focus on enriching myself. I enjoy practicing these religions because it creates a sense of wisdom and enlightenment in me. I'm not strictly religious but I believe in the power of spiritual forces and I prefer to harness them for the prosperity of myself and my family.
- I like to do yoga and meditate a lot. These keep me not only calm and balanced but they also help me become in touch with a lot of the lighter spiritual forces. I feel like I have been weighted down a lot by the physical world and the darkness of the people around me. I've come to a realization that people aren't spiritually enlightened because they engage in human desires. I also struggle with a lot of human material desires and hedonism and it has dimmed a lot of my light

4. Opinion on war and militaries? What is power to you?

- Militaries are necessary to protect and defend the country from invasions or threats. I can agree with this sentiment. That being said, war is absolutely horrible and should be stopped. This kind of violence kills a bunch of innocent civilians and puts the lives of many people in danger. I get absolutely repulsed by the world leaders and how they try to invade other countries and nations and destroy peace.
- Power has always been a rather painful subject to me. Mainly because my whole life I've always felt powerless. I've constantly been around several people who've tried to dominate me in any kind of way. And in many situations, I've been the one on the receiving end and victimized repeatedly. I'm the one who gets rejected or humiliated (if someone has social power) or brutally dominated (if someone is forceful) or bossed around. And it hurts even more that I never stood up for myself. I'm ashamed to admit that I've always cowered and took being bullied. Being a pushover is by biggest shame. That's why I crave personal power. Not aggressiveness, not dominating others. But I wish to become assertive and protect my peace from others who seek to threaten it. I aim to have personal power over myself so that I can protect myself from predators.
- By having status, money, and prestige, I hope to never be underestimated or looked down upon again. I've always felt like Naruto in that sense. He was bullied a lot until he slowly earned respect and then became Hokage. For me, power is freedom. And by having money, I have the freedom to get away from all the awful people in my life. And I get to choose to go to therapy or choose where to travel. I have sovereignty on my life.
- I've noticed a lot of power abuses occurring due to toxic masculinity. Several guys have and continue to bully me and use me as sort of the punching bag for them to assert their dominance. Especially being a bisexual guy, I've noticed how homophobia is meant to oppress people who just want love. And I notice how these guys often try to control or limit women in some way so they can assert their male dominance. Chauvinism and male egos are the worst sort of power you can have. That's why I think that women and gay men are honestly more powerful; we survive this crap from stupid loser fk boys that think they're men.

Interests

5. What have you had long conversations about? What are your interests? Why?

- I love to constantly talk about human psychology because I enjoy understanding people and what makes them the way they are. This is why I'm a psychology major. I enjoy learning about people and this is exactly why I'm able to read into others so well. I enjoy philosophy a lot for this reason too. I like to read a lot of philosophers like Nietzsche, Camus, and Sylvia Plath. Human nature and existence has always morbidly fascinated me.
- I've always had long conversations about artistic things. Music is a huge one. I tend to info dump constantly about various kinds of music. I'm fascinated by music as an art form, the genres out there, and I am seeking to learn music production and songwriting.

- Music itself is extremely interesting because it's essentially something that characterizes and defines times and eras. Music is extremely powerful because it pretty much is what creates a lot of archetypes and personalities in the collective consciousness and that's why I find it fascinating to discuss. It fascinates me to trace back the foundations of musical styles and then see how they branch out (like how rock formed into grunge, metal, etc.) or how pop music has been shaped (pop albums that are ahead of their time or electronic music that was futuristic). In addition, the way that sounds and melodies interact with people's neurological thought processes and shape their personalities and create aesthetics has always fascinated me. This is why I choose to listen to music as a signaling of my identity
- I love music and will info-dump about it. But many people don't share a lot of my aesthetic fascinations or tastes and find it frivolous which makes me sad. 😞
- I'm also interested in understanding how languages and accents formed over time. Like why do people have a certain affect or tone in how they speak? Where did that originate from?
- I love to chat about pop culture, culture in general, and trends in art and music. Debating about these things gives me a sense of aesthetic pleasure and fulfillment. And surprisingly, it can be very philosophical and political. I enjoy really thinking about how certain styles of art or fashion are reflective of societal structures not only because I'm moralistic but also, it's fascinating to understand how society developed (and why I always enjoy looking at past eras)
- I also have a lot of interests regarding movie and anime plots. I've always been driven by examining character interactions and looking at what personalities each character is like
- Psychoanalysis is also a huge one. MBTI, enneagram, Socionics. I love to type people and teach others.
- I have a lot of interests in time travel and UFO conspiracies. I'm a huge nerd for this type of stuff. I'm always watching National Geographic videos about time travel.

6. Interested in health/medicine as a conversation topic? Are you focused on your body?

- Yes, I'm absolutely interested in this. I've always been told I should be pre-med. I'm very interested in pursuing clinical psychology because I'd love to look at mental health and I've noticed that many problems that have occurred in my life and my parents and other people's lives are due to poor mental health. I'd wanna be a psychiatrist or clinical psychologist if not an entertainer
- I'm a massive health nut. I love to go to the gym daily and lift weights and I seek to do kung fu classes. I'm also huge on my grooming and diet. I constantly make sure to avoid sugar, eat within my maintenance calories, eat veggies, and get protein so that I can maintain an extremely healthy and good physique.
- I'm also huge on my skincare and haircare routines. I always make sure to wear SPF so that my skin doesn't age prematurely, I literally have the routine of using a cleanser and vitamin C and toners, and so on. I also tend to do a lot of haircare. I enjoy oiling my hair, I rinse with ACV, and pretty much style my hair with curl creams so that my hair looks wavy and shiny.
- I strongly care a lot about the way I look and take pride in being considered hot and attractive. So I will do anything to ensure that I'm good looking. Sure, I'm super vain and don't deny my vanity about my appearance, but that single minded goal/image of myself motivates me to take care of my body when I'd otherwise be a slob.

- I guess I'm more focused on my body in the sense that I want to be muscular, I want to be handsome and extremely hot, I want to be considered pretty and attractive, and want to be strong enough to defend myself.
- That being said, I have worked out too much, ego lifted, and overexerted myself. I've also skipped meals. And I have essentially gotten terrible sleep sometimes. My friend worries for my health because she thinks i drink too much (I hardly drink but she thinks I do) or sleep too late. And people around me think im reckless.

7. What do you think of daily chores?

- I like the idea of doing daily chores to be clean. But I'm always forgetting to do them. My head is always in the clouds and I get distracted easily. On top of that, I tend to be a bit unaware. So I tend to be very messy as a result of this. My room is usually a huge mess and my bathroom is even worse. Dishes can also pile up.
- I tend to forget to do a lot of my chores and am not the best with keeping up with them. I only tend to remember chores when they have a specific goal or result that they accomplish

8. Books or films you liked? Recently read/watched or otherwise. Examples welcome.

- I read No Longer Human as of recent. I related a lot to that book and Yozo Oba and his regrets about how his passivity made him take decisions which caused him depression and sorrow. I also strongly related when Yozo said that he felt detached from humans. For me, humans have always felt strange to me. Like things that needed to be studied.

9. What has made you cry? What has made you smile? Why?

- I've cried many times (in private) when I've felt extremely overwhelmed and dissatisfied with a lot of my life. The reason because it feels like life is full of constant suffering. Usually though, I contain a lot of my emotions outwardly and hardly ever cry. It takes a lot to make me tear up. Im like a tightly sealed bottle and I try not to show any vulnerability around anyone. But if I've especially had a rough day, that's when the tears start rolling.
- Usually, what comes out publicly in anger and gritted teeth and harsh comments is privately expressed in tears.
- I've always smiled when the emotional atmosphere around me is euphoric or funny in some kind of way. When I'm having fun, experiencing life, or cracking jokes, I'm usually laughing a lot. When I sway to the beat of good music, I'm feeling a crowd of people partying, and the atmosphere is joking, that euphoria takes over me and I can't stop smiling stupidly.
- But when the emotional atmosphere is oppressive and I've noticed I don't belong, it makes me angered.

10. Where do you feel: at one with the environment/a sense of belonging?

- I don't think I've ever felt this feeling. Maybe it's undiagnosed neurodivergence? But even in situations where I feel like I should belong, I just don't feel like I do. And other people usually tend to treat me differently
- Being a very introverted person, I've only felt belonging in my own inner world with my own private interests. I've felt much more lonely with the external environment around other people than I have in my own inner imagination. That's why I say that having a fantasy world will save you massively
- Although I've felt extremely alien to my peers and different from people in general, surprisingly, I've had a lot of insightful conversations with the elderly and I find them more welcoming and less ego-driven than my own peers.
- I've never felt any sort of belonging. I've never felt like an object of permanence. I've always felt like a floating blob. A cloud. It always been as if I'm a cloudy entity. I've never been aware of my existence as a living existing breathing organism. And I feel like a seal out of water. In my element, there's an invisible power that I carry. But I'm very flimsy and clueless in the world around me. I observe rather than act. And I've sensed that others see this about me.

Evaluation & Behaviour

11. What have people seen as your weaknesses? What do you dislike about yourself?

- A lot of people think my weakness is me being very quiet socially and not talking or saying much. They think I'm aloof or weird. People assume that I'm very zoned out and uninterested in them as a result of it. And as a result of the quietness and introversion, I become very withdrawn and reclusive. And I'm extremely guarded to where I can't be vulnerable with a lot of people and have been secretive
- People also assume I'm a very unrealistic person and that I'm overly frivolous. They assume that I'm flimsy and highly unaware of the real world around me and even talk condescendingly to me as if I'm a child just because of this. People literally have hated me because I'm whimsical and live in a world of glamour and technicolor
- My parents have seen my aesthetic tendencies and vanity along with my disorganization as a major weakness and worry for me. It makes sense as to be honest, the family situation isn't very stable right now. My dad has said he was worried how I'd survive, especially being a neurodivergent kid who gets bullied a lot by the world. And especially my mom gets annoyed and frustrated with me, often saying that I'm very unrealistic, daydreaming, spending on frivolous stuff, and so on. She's more of a realist, your typical sensor. And the rest of the world has been even less kind to me. They have bullied and humiliated me simply because I'm "offbeat" and laughed at me like some bumbling loser.
- People say that I'm extremely unforgiving and always willing to see the worst in others. I'm usually very good at reading people and judging my distance between them. But people don't like that I hold grudges. But it's simple as that. If I consider someone to be evil, they are crossed out of my life forever
- My passivity has always created me problems and people have taken advantage of it repeatedly
- I'm constantly numbing myself quite a lot. I tend to withdraw a lot and narcotize. A major struggle is that I want to feel my true intensity but the pain is too much for me to deal with so I numb myself a lot and escape

- People have always found me annoying because they think I info dump constantly. And they are very hostile in how they express this to me. But they never tell me the reason why they hate it, they just expect me to be okay with hating them
- One thing I hate about myself. I've always resented that I've never actually stood up for myself when people have blatantly disrespected me. Ive always felt as if I've just been weak and timid where I could've easily stood up for myself. I've always felt like I'm meant to be targeted
- A lot of people think I'm controlling or very arrogant. I have noticed that I become too aggressive or combative when people have really messed with me too much. It's satisfying in the moment because honestly, those people started it by being bullies. But in the long-term, I think it would worsen my personality. In addition, I know I can be very high maintenance about my standards regarding how things are done and I tend to seek leverage. But I don't think I'm overreaching. And I try not to.
- For people who are controlling and overreaching, I've always yielded to them and I strongly resent this. I know I could've told them off and I don't know why I didn't.

12. What have people seen as your strengths? What do you like about yourself?

- A lot of people consider my fashion sense and artistic sense to be a major strength. People absolutely love seeing the kinds of pieces and jewelry I'm wearing and think I'm a really good aesthete. I always get compliments on the type of clothes I wear, my fashion, and my perfumes.
- A lot of people basically praise my music taste and say that I have an incredible selection for music playlists.
- I take pride in being an aesthete, artist, and performer a lot of the time. I'm very proud of my tastes in aesthetics and music and I deeply wish to be able to produce timeless aesthetic music and have people praise my works of art and respect my artistic significance. Fashion is a major outlet for me because it signals an impression and makes people respect me or turns me into a canvas of fascinating art and beauty
- My parents have described me as an incredibly smart person. They've said that I'm extremely good at predicting and forecasting situations and analyzing others. My dad tells me I should be a psychologist and my mom wishes I was pre-med.
- I'm also a good writer. I've been told that I'm good at writing poetry and fictional stories and I love to write my own stories and stuff like that. I have a very strong way with my words and have very intense songs I've written as a result
- I've been told by some people I casually chatted with that I'm extremely good at socializing. A driving instructor said that I seemed quiet at first but when we talked, he was surprised at how socially smooth I was. And an Uber driver once said that I was a very good communicator. I've never noticed it but several people apparently have found me very charming. I've also noticed that I have an ability to persuade people. I haven't used this for evil, in fact I'm not aware of how powerful my words are. But I've discovered that I've been able to make people do things in my favor and pragmatically get what I want. But without antagonism and force, I've done it using very honey coated words.
- I've also been told that I'm extremely good at seeing through people and situations. I've always been good at predicting how things will go, I tend to understand what a person truly is like (even if others think they are soooo sweet, I'm not fooled), and I tend to be a very good judge of character regarding who gets to be in my life and who doesn't.

- Many people have complimented my good looks. People have said that I'm very beautiful or handsome or complimented my physique. So naturally, I take pride in my sex appeal and my looks. However, it also has become a sort of objectification where I feel like a Ken/Barbie doll.

People & Interactions

15. What qualities do you most like and dislike in other people? What types do you get along with?

- I dislike controlling, abusive, cruel, and arrogant people a lot. I absolutely hate those that try to bully or annoy me or limit me in any way possible
- I absolutely hate chauvinistic men for sure
- I enjoy people who are assertive. I like strong people. They need to be tough and strong without being abusive or domineering in anyway. I enjoy funny people who think quick on their feet and bold daring personalities that say what's on their mind
- I absolutely hate fake people who are cliquish or who pretend to be all sweet with the "bless your heart" look. If you have something to say to my face, say it, coward.

16. How do you feel about romance/sex? What qualities do you want in a partner?

- I absolutely would love to have passionate romance with good sex. I'd absolutely enjoy having an amazing and caring partner who's beautiful on the inside and out.
- It's weird. Many of the partners that I have been drawn to are the same kinds of people who have flaked me, ghosted me, and ignored me. It's the same people who look down on me. It's the really cocky, bold, and very charismatic type. They are super hot and extremely flirtatious and cool. But they have ghosted and flaked me and were cliquish assholes who objectified me. Nowadays, I find myself preferring partners who actually are authentic, genuinely kind, and I can connect with. I want someone who I can genuinely emotionally and intellectually bond with who has depth. But I also don't want someone who's too stable or too safe.
- Looks wise, I've always been into guys who are attractive in the boyish way but they are also rather muscular and sort of hunks. Chad Micheal Murray was my biggest 2000s male crush. And Goku and Vegeta were my anime crush.
- Selena Gomez was my female Disney crush growing up. I've liked girls who are cute but also feisty, headstrong, and very bold.

If I had to describe a personality:

- I've always been attracted to ENFJ, ESTP, and ISTP people and characters

17. A friend makes a claim that clashes with your current beliefs. What is your inward and outward reaction?

- Outwardly, I'm just sort of quiet as a way to be respectful. But if asked or if the claim was something I thought was offensive, I'd share my point of view.
- Inwardly, I'd be in strong disbelief as it goes against my worldview

18. How do you choose your friends and how do you behave around them?

- I choose my friends based on: whether they've proved their trustworthiness (as many fake friends took advantage of me), whether they treat me respectfully, and whether they value me as a friend. I'm very cynical and distrustful so I don't trust as easily. Everyone's merely an acquaintance.
- With my friends, I'm usually always joking with them and I tend to be very bubbly and open with them

19. How do you behave around strangers?

- With strangers, I'm quiet and a little but shy. I'm very reserved but I'm polite to them. I guard myself a lot more with strangers and I tend to be super private towards them for the most part. I'm sort of neutral and withdrawn in that case
- I'm usually pretty non-confrontational with strangers and prefer not to get into unnecessary drama with anyone
- The thing is, despite my introversion and my reservedness, I know how to socially maneuver situations and constantly charm people a lot. Surprisingly, people find my very persuasive. I know how to entertain people on the Internet. Like on Reddit or Instagram, random strangers will engage with my content and I'll get them entertained. In addition, a lot of people have described me as seeming very quiet but once I talk, I'm very good at charming them. To be honest, I fake it because I'm actually really painfully shy. But I often tend to charm people through eye contact and often by saying the right things. I have been known to have a tendency to provoke reactions in others. This has led me to being rather manipulative, using charm to mislead people.