

Police Hunt Down Man Who Tried to Abduct Child from Bus Stop

First off before we go into the video, I'd like to put it out that people are getting quite ballsy with the way they break the law. For what it is, I'm saying you got to watch out you know. Like, take care of yourself out there.

{Insert 0:04 – 0:15} Wait a minute, we have to rewind and consider what we saw. A man, quite huge I daresay is having problems dragging a little girl. Across the street we see a dude, it must be a dude, with his hoody on looking at the scene and walking off like nothing is happening. Crazy right? Not jumping to conclusions, but it's either he is part of the plan or our society is getting worse. We have to give it up for that young lady. Imagine the strength needed to hold onto those bars when immense strength from a man is trying to pull you off. I guess the science is true: we are capable of much in the face of danger.

{Insert: 0:30 – 0:41} Most of you must have noticed the cars parked at the other end of the road. And even the cars driving by. That is a little girl for God's sake. Nobody even comes out or pulls over to tackle that big fellow. Say what you want but it is sad. Really sad.

{Insert: 1:00 - 1:31} Props to the witness that copied the plate number. With that out of the way, the manner and style of approach by the police is good. If you've observed the suspect is at a gas station. The scene is filled with people, any form of escalation will be bad. The police are doing well so far.

I'm not a police officer but putting the pressure on the passenger was genius. I mean if I commit a crime and get pulled over, I'll be anxious. Being told you're not involved makes you drop your guard. The whole information gathering to find out that he's the suspect is genius too. You don't want to play the trick on the wrong person.

{Insert: 2:05 – 2:15} If you listen, you can hear the passenger saying he doesn't know what is going on. The trick is working. He is ruffled while the main culprit is at peace. He even tells the police his name, this is funny.

{Insert: 2:40 – 3:21} It's been on my chest for a while now but I have to say it. If deceit was a skill these police officers must be protégés or something. They manage the situation ensuring safety at the gas station and even deceive the culprit. The police have a conversation about separating them in his presence. Nothing assures you of innocence like separation from the suspected. To the culprit, he doesn't seem alarmed. The police officers assure him that he is innocent. I mean that dude left his car without his keys. He was cool.

{Insert: 3:27 – 4:04} Nothing, absolutely nothing, screams comfortably like entering a police officer's backseat without fuss. I mean this dude was convinced. The police spoke like a brother, you know. The officer even asks him about his passenger. The question was like let us in on the crime your friend has committed. What surprised me was asking if he had to do all this, while entering a police car. Now if the door was left open it would've been a bit assuring that the police were not trying to overreach in their attempt of deceit. The officers made him comfortable and locked him in. That dude was deceived big time.

{Insert: 4:08 – 5:20} The police were not relenting at all. I mean one specific officer continues to reassure the culprit that he is without fault. The officer says, “You're all good men, you just have the wrong person in your car.” Say what you want but that is sick. That dude might've been doubting his passenger – though he's not saintly – but the officer's remark confirmed his suspicion. The officer says if someone pulls me over like you, I'd ask what's up and thank him for being cool with them. That's one cunning officer. It's funny how the suspect never asks about his passenger or what he's done wrong. He was bothered about himself and believed the lie that he was not at fault.

{Insert: 5:33 - 6:13} That dude was talking to the cop as though their friends or even in a gang. Having a soft drink and laughing about nothing is quite corny. And our beloved cop pulled it off with finesse. The suspect even takes advice from the cop. The cops add that his friend is trying to get him into trouble. Funny, I must say, but this dude's story is about to be a cautionary tale.

{Insert: 6:31 – 6:44} The dude - t he passenger, must be freaked out. But that cop steps down the pressure by asking for a lighter. I mean that is sleek if you ask me.

{Insert: 7:18 – 8:36} After filling the dude in on the situation he was visibly shaken. The police officer in his statement, said he was not sure. I must add that I am not sure as well. Not just of his intent but how he intended to get away with such an act that is if he even pulled it off. First off, unlike his driver friend, he doesn't try to be selfish. When questioned about the suspect he doesn't try to sell out. He states the fact and even tries to back his homie up. Clear conscience indeed fears no accusation.

{Insert: 8:54 – 10:01} Our good cop tries to give him advice. That is cool, and really mature. I don't think most of you saw what happened. The suspect received a lighted blunt from his passenger and some cash. Now the passenger does this out of care. The truth always has a way of showing in the act. This has been quite informative for me, and I hope it has been for you too.
