

What does everyone think, are we finally done with snow here on the front range, or will Colorado surprise us with one another snowfall this spring (surely there wouldn't be MORE than one more would there?) Whether or not we have more snow coming, I predict lots of quilts on Saturday as we reveal the results of our guild Pantone color of the (Living Coral) challenge! I've seen a few in-process items, either on social media or at the retreat last month, and it looks like lots of interpretations, so seeing how everyone interpreted the challenge should be a lot of fun.

Because Saturday is also the final day to submit quilts for this summer's outdoor quilt show in Monument, our program this month will be an expanded Show & Tell session. So, bring any of those quilts we haven't seen yet that you are submitting, blocks you've made for this month's adventure block swap (if you're participating) plus your challenge quilt. This would also be an easy month to jump into the Quilter's Year Book challenge, since we're doing week 36--Show off, which is about your feelings on entering a quilt in a show.

The guild has received emails recently from several other guilds in the area about some upcoming events they are planning:

- The Palmer Divide Quilt Guild is having an evening lecture with Judy Coates Perez on Thursday, June 6th, and Judy will be teaching her Tea & Ephemera class (cost is $105) on Friday, June 7th. I will have additional details at Saturday's meeting. If you can't make the meeting and would like more info, please email at margiej1stoo@gmail.com
- The Colorado Quilting Council has several speakers scheduled through the end of 2020 that you might be interested in as well. Their lectures are on Saturday mornings, and their workshops are 9 am - 4 pm Sunday. Check out their website <http://coloradoquiltingcouncil.com> for more info.
