

Rick Huntley is a highly skilled leadership, organization development and equity and inclusion change consultant; he facilitates Human Interaction labs, and is teacher with demonstrated ability to successfully facilitate organizational learning, skill development and system-wide change using organization development theory, experiential learning, and individual growth.

He's a former Dean of two NTL's signature development programs as well as past chair of NTL's Board of Directors. Rick was on the instructional team at the American University/NTL, Masters of Organization Development Program, and now an adjunct lecturer at Georgetown University's Institute for Transformational Learning. He is also visiting faculty for NTL's Organization Development and Change Certificate Program, UK.

He co-authored "Journeys of Race, Color and Culture: From Racial Inequality to Equity and Inclusion.

Rick completed certificates in Organization and Systems Development from the Gestalt OSD Center and the International Gestalt Organization Leadership and Development Program.