

Early Life and Challenges

Monica Kindle grew up in San Bernardino, California, as the youngest of her siblings. Three of her siblings were involved in gangs, and Monica was raised in poverty by a loving mother who lived with paranoid schizophrenia, alongside a stepfather who faced literacy challenges and had a criminal history, including incarceration. Despite these obstacles, Monica's early life laid the foundation for her resilience and determination.

Education and Personal Growth

Though Monica dropped out of school after 8th grade and became a teen mother, she was inspired by her middle school counselor to pursue higher education. This motivation led her to earn her GED, followed by a bachelor's degree from Missouri Western State University and a master's degree from Bowie State University. Her journey reflects a commitment to personal growth and the importance of education as a tool for transformation.

Career and Leadership

Monica has built a career centered on advocacy and public service. She has served as a deputy juvenile officer and held senior leadership roles in both the public and non-profit sectors. Monica is passionate about empowering youth and families, especially focusing on parent education. Her work demonstrates her dedication to making a positive impact in her community and the lives of others.

Values and Approach

Monica's style balances professionalism with authenticity. She integrates her lived experiences into her work, drawing on her knowledge of human resources, learning, and organizational development. Monica strives to create spaces where individuals and organizations can grow and thrive, particularly in the context of youth and family development.
