

Hi Vonda,

I hope this message finds you well. I wanted to express my strong interest in your company's software developer internship opportunity.

The reason why I want to become a software developer is because it's something I genuinely enjoy. When I start coding, I become immersed in the task, and time seems to slip away. Coding isn't just a task for me; it's a hobby I'm genuinely passionate about turning into a career. Additionally, I know the significant career and financial benefits of being a software developer. This would change my life and provide opportunities for my partner and children.

My background has been a diverse journey with various career stops, including roles as a Charity salesman, Railway Engineer, and plasterer. While my journey involves multiple job types, it has equipped me with various personal and technical skills that can be effectively applied to a career in Software Development.

Given my varied work history, you might be wondering why you should consider me. What makes me committed to this field? Here are some reasons:

1. My lifelong passion for computers began during my teenage years when I immersed myself in graphic design using Photoshop.
2. My comfort with computers: I have always owned and used them extensively.
3. My early experiences with basic HTML coding for Myspace webpages.
4. A shift in my priorities: at almost 30 years old, I'm seeking a fulfilling career, not just a paycheck. Coding is the future, especially with rapid technological advancements like WEB3 and AI. The job market is thriving, and I am confident I am well-suited for this career path.

Currently, I am studying Web Development at Code Your Future in Birmingham, where we are the 5th cohort to undertake this course. I thoroughly enjoyed the learning process, especially during the HTML & CSS module, where I excelled. This module also enhanced my graphic design skills, and my prior knowledge of HTML & CSS has grown significantly.

I envision a future where I achieve financial independence, either working as a self-employed developer or for a reputable company. Once my financial situation stabilises, I plan to support my partner and children in reaching their future milestones.

In conclusion, my unique background and dedication set me apart as a candidate for this internship opportunity. I am confident that my ability to connect with people, my punctuality, and belief in the principle of "you reap what you sow" will make me a valuable asset to your team. I am excited about the possibility of contributing to your organisation and eagerly await your response.

Thank you for considering my application.

Sincerely,
Marcus Zagorski
