

Acknowledgements:

I could never have accomplished the entirety of my honors independent study without the generous encouragement and support of many individuals and organizations. I would like to take this moment to acknowledge these individuals and institutions:

- Dr. Woodard, who served as my independent study advisor for the first two credits, helped me define and “push” my independent study, discussed and read many pain narratives with me, and encouraged me to consider the difficult questions about pain management.
- Dr. Stewart, who served as my independent study advisor for the last credit of my project, answered many of my relentless questions, and pushed me to continue blogging and writing.
- Dr. Moeller, who encouraged me, helped me establish necessary contacts, and assisted me with the IRB approval process.
- Dr. Nichols, for being a superb dean of the honors college and for helping me with the details of my sometimes vaguely-defined independent study.
- The English department faculty, as well as my many former teachers who passed on information about my study to interested parties, especially: Dr. McEntee, Dr. Stewart, Dr. Woodard, Dr. Moeller, Professor Lacher-Starace, Professor Ekeland, Dr. Danker, and Dr. Potts
- The SDEA, for allowing me to include information about my study in their newsletter.
- The many doctors, chiropractors, health care institutions, and other health care professionals who helped me get the word out about my project (I will not name specific people institutions to respect the requests of many of the parties in this category)
- And, of course, the readers of my blog and anyone who participated in my anonymous survey-I greatly appreciated you taking time to show interest in my study!

Thank you!
